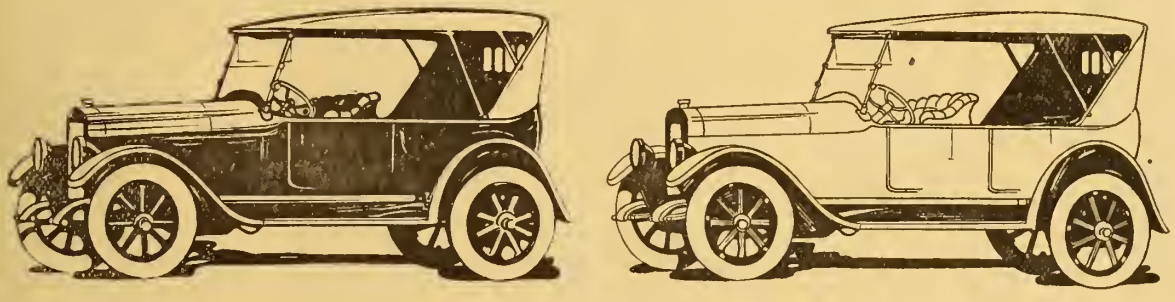
Simplex

Isn't this a fair comparison?



To the man who doesn't know, one automobile looks much like another; and when he sees two cars of the same general style he's likely to put them in the same class as to quality.

But when he becomes acquainted with automobiles he stops judging by general appearance, and goes deeper. In fact, he learns that often the cheaper car is built more for looks, at the expense of quality in vital parts.

In this respect it is fair to compare Projectors with automobiles and to point out how unwise it is to say "Oh, a Projector is a Projector; they're all about alike."

Nothing of the kind. They must of necessity resemble each other in general appearance, the same as automobiles; but in the VITAL PARTS, that's where the big difference lies.

It is the quality of these vital parts that determines the performance of any Machine, and not the finish. A die-cast gear is a soft-metal gear no matter how heavily you nickelplate it; and a cut cast-iron or steel gear with a decent machine finish will outlast a number of them.

That's the kind of stuff the Simplex is made of; and that's why its projection is not only perfect when the Machine is new, but PERMANENTLY so.

The screen doesn't show how the Projector LOOKS, but how it is BUILT

Projectionist Ray says

"The finest fixings, the best orchestra and the most lavish decorations will never make a theatre "go," unless there is included the proper kind of projection.

"Years of experience enable me to speak with certainty when I say that POWER'S PROJECTS PERFECTLY—and beyond perfection you can't go.

"I'm a repeater when I say POWER'S stands the test of Time, but you've got to show me a test that equals it.

"POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH has come through on this supreme test which has won for it the confidence of both trade and public throughout the world.

"Why, do you suppose, such houses as Loew's Brooklyn Metropolitan and Washington Palace (two of the finest in America) use POWER'S? Why?

GLADYS LESLIE in "THE BELOVED IMPOSTOR"

SECOND RELEASE OF THE GLADYS LESLIE STAR SERIES

Written by Mrs. Elizabeth J. Mariani Directed by Joseph Gleason

A LOVABLE mite of a teasing, heart-grabbing debutante is the role of Gladys Leslie in this tender comedy drama.

Betty made a wager that she could win Dick Mentor—a woman-hater—his hate springing from the heart-ache that another woman had caused him in the past that he was trying to forget.

And to batter her way into a heart armored against the wiles of women—how to do it! Betty knew. She assumed the part of a twelve-year-old child, and Dick turned to her as the first feminine influence that he had allowed to enter his life since the great event that had embittered him.

But Betty's plan worked too well; for when she had won his love as a child, she knew that she had lost her own woman's heart to him. It is the way in which she works herself out of this serio-comic situation that makes this unusual role the best in which this widely popular star has ever appeared.

WHEN the happy millions had finished celebrating Victory, what next did they want? It's what you are eager for—you, your wife and everybody else in your town.

You're all anxious for just one thing: to hear the story of how our boys did it—the real story, full of fire and color, from the lips of one of the fellows from your own town. Right? You bet!

Well, here it is. The story of Victory, the reason why, brought before your very eyes. It's as intimate a tale as though told by your brother—all the interesting touches. That's why it's the big production of the year—the picture all America wants to see.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "Arizona"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

Adapted from Augustus Thomas's Play "Arizona"
Produced by Douglas Fairbanks Picture Corporation

MADE TO ORDER FOR FAIRBANKS

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS aboard a broncho dashes up to the ranch house and yells to a bunch of cow punchers, "Come on quick, we're going to fight."

"Fight who?"

'Who, hell! What difference does it make? Come on!"

And away they go—a thunder of hoofs and a dust cloud, Douglas Fairbanks and his very own army.

That's a scene from "Arizona," a scene typical of this great stage success now produced in the big out-doors where the story belongs.

As a play it was a box office winner. As a moving picture, with Douglas Fairbanks as "Lieut. Denton"—say what a business you'll do!

THE Paramount-Drew Comedies, produced by the V. B. K. Corporation, will be in two reels each and one subject will be released each month—24 reels a year.

Mr. and Mrs. Drew formerly made one reel comedies — one each week, 52 reels a year.

Because now they will be able to take their time, Mr. and Mrs. Drew will produce comedies of even higher quality than ever before.

THE appeal of the Paramount-Drew Comedies is limited to the following classes of patrons of moving picture theatres:

1—Youngsters.

2—Men—married, happy and unhappy.

3—Women — married, happy and unhappy.

4—Men, unmarried, who wish they weren't unmarried.

5—Men, unmarried, who are glad of it.

6—Women, unmarried, who wish they weren't.

Goldwyn to Distribute the Ford Educational Weekly

THE FORD MOTOR COMPANY, the greatest manufacturing enterprise in America, has for four years placed its tremendous resources behind the creation of a great educational film weekly.

At this moment from 3,000 to 4,000 theatres are presenting this unique and powerful screen achievement to their audiences, and have been doing so since its inauguration.

It is Henry Ford's intention to have this costly and popular weekly given the greatest volume of distribution ever attained by any feature in the motion picture industry.

In keeping with his demand that a great and stable Educational be available for the entire American public and at a minimum of cost to the exhibitors who will present it; with the intention of having such a weekly publicly exhibited in from 5,000 to 7,000 theatres each week

Henry Ford and His Representatives have chosen GOLDWYN as the exclusive distributors of The FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

A Single Reel Weekly 52 Issues a Year

Goldwyn invites the exhibitors of the nation to write, wire or visit its branch offices to make immediate arrangements for the booking of this approved and established feature and announces herewith the first five issues to be released under the Goldwyn imprint:

Jan. 12: "What Uncle Sam Will Do For 2 Cents."
Jan. 19: "The Truth About The Liberty Motor."
Jan. 26: "Hang It All!" The story of wall paper.
Feb. 2: "Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas." The story of the Hog Island shipyards.
Feb. 9: Canada's "Mountain of Tears." Mt. Edith Cavell.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

A Great Imagination Has Built the Ford Educational Weekly

THERE is not in the entire industry a feature filled with such humanness, of such great range and scope as the Ford Educational Weekly.

It is both current and permanent in its appeal. It is a scenic, a travelogue, a historical record, a portrayer of industry in many of its fascinating phases; a stimulator of patriotism and good citizenship.

In Detroit Mr. Ford has equipped a plant and laboratory that take rank with the best plants in the industry. His Educational Weekly always has the distinction of beautiful production.

The men who produce the Ford Educational Weekly have entree to plants and institutions that are still barred to the inquisitive lens of other cameras. Their power lies in the tremendous power and resources of the man whose far-reaching dreams are translated into action.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, in announcing the distribution under the Goldwyn imprint of this splendid product, correctly says that "Henry Ford has created the Ford Educational Weekly with no thought of profit, but because he feels that through this weekly will be conveyed a message of inspiration to the American public."

The conditions under which the Ford Educational Weekly is to be placed in increasing thousands of motion picture theatres are vitally interesting to exhibitors. The cost is to be so remarkably low that no exhibitor can afford to keep it off his screen.

Advance prints of the first five releases now announced will be in all Goldwyn offices by December 15. Every Goldwyn manager and salesman and 10,500 Ford Motor Company sales agencies in the United States in a few days will be ready to sign contracts or forward applications for service to the Goldwyn Home Office.

Another Madge Kennedy Success

The Most Favorable Notices She Ever Received Are On "A PERFECT LADY"

EXHIBITORS accept and believe a unanimous verdict on the success of a star and production. They know that it is not the function or intention of the critics to be over-enthusiastic or over-friendly.

It is therefore Goldwyn's pleasure to stand aside while those who have seen MADGE KENNEDY in "A PERFECT LADY" by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf definitely pronounce this production to be her most successful Goldwyn Picture.

"A PERFECT LADY" is a big stage hit by two nationally-known authors, with a universally loved star of constantly increasing popularity and appeal and directed with great skill by Clarence G. Badger.

Not forgetting the nation-wide acclaim that has greeted each new picture of this favorite star, Goldwyn is proud of the spontaneous approval shown in the following reviews:

NEW YORK AMERICAN: An unusually strong and laughable dramatic comedy with even bigger appeal than the original play.

NEW YORK SUN: Madge Kennedy's newest Goldwyn, "A Perfect Lady," is a winner. An inimitable and bewitching star.

NEW YORK POST: "In a Perfect Lady" Madge Kennedy is an even better comedienne than ever before...Delightful...Bright.

NEW YORK HERALD: Madge Kennedy has played many screen roles delightfully, but she has never before had a finer success than in "A Perfect Lady."

NEW YORK WORLD: "A Perfect Lady," was a stage hit and now Goldwyn has turned it into a truly enjoyable picture.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: It would be hard to picturize a stage play more successfully than "A Perfect Lady" has been by Goldwyn..... One has to be glowingly enthusiastic in writing about Madge Kennedy."

PATHÉ REVIEW

a film magazine

The one requirement asked for each subject that goes into this fascinating film is, "is it interesting?" Each number will be made up of Scientific, Educational, Scenic, Humorous, or Sport subjects, not one of which will be dry, or so lengthy as to be uninteresting.

The first number will be released on January 19th. Its contents are typical of succeeding issues. They look attractive, they are attractive!

Analysis of Baseball (wonderful slow motion photography)
How Music Affects Animals (Ditmars Film)
Picturesque Brittany (Pathécolor)
Butterflies and Bees (Pathécolor)

Here is truly a release which gets away from the objections which so often attach to the words "educational" or "scenic". It is a film for the whole family, suitable for every theatre and with a most dependable quality.

Take a look at the first issue at your nearest Pathé Exchange!

THEY ARE COMING BACK FROM BATTLEFIELD AND CAMP

MILLIONS of young American soldiers, trained to the minute—those splendid armies whose skill and valor shattered Germany's dream of World Domination—they represent the triumph of our modern military system and our national efficiency.

A New Idea

The man who doesn't think of the future usually lives to regret the past.

Live-wire exhibitors always are thinking very much about the future.

And they're thinking more seriously than ever about it right now, while the nations of the world are trying to decide whether they should put on their business coats or stick to shirt sleeves and preparedness.

That's why so many exhibitors are interested in the Fox Idea.

The Fox Idea takes the future into consideration.

The Fox Idea is a merchandizing idea. It is based on the sound business principle that a good product is an asset even before it is sold.

The Fox Idea is that if an exhibitor's "Fox Days" are successful days, there will be more of them —that the public will ascertain these days and remember them

—and that public, exhibitor and producer alike will benefit.

The Fox Idea is business principle applied to motion pictures.

World's Record—"UNDER FOUR FLAGS"

FOR one solid week ending November 23, the two foremost motion picture houses in the world—the Rivoli and Rialto, in New York, played to the biggest audience in their history—packed to the doors every performance.

MR. S. L. ROTHAPFEL says:

"Even with these two great houses it proved impossible to accommodate the crowds and now—after our colossal record of attendance, I have contracted for this great film for another solid week, at the Rivoli, beginning December 1st."

These great pictures can never be taken again, for they are the last great battles of the last great war—close up living records of the stirring scenes that really happened—thrills in the air—in the sea battling the submarines—in the front line trenches.

"Under Four Flags" is the actual, authentic official United States Government War film made at the front.

Will be released in 5 REELS Every foot an attendance magnet

To Those Who Criticise "First National's" So-called Extravagance

"Virtuous Wives" is finished. We saw the completed production last night. It is a picture that will justify our preference for better pictures at higher prices more eloquently than any words of ours.

It is more than a month since we saw the first print. It was a good picture then. But it required additional cutting, titles had to be altered, some retakes made—in a word, it had to be given the finish that marks the difference between a special and a program release.

All this takes time—the time of high salaried men—and costs money. But when "Virtuous Wives" goes to trial on the screens, with the public sitting in judgment—we have no fear of the verdict. We know that satisfaction to the public means profit to our own theatres and those of our customers.

Some exhibitors who have already contracted for it and perhaps felt that the price was too high, are going to admit that such productions are worth all they cost them—and more.

There is one angle to the matter which many exhibitors overlook; that is, that where they individually spend a few extra dollars for a real quality production, the producer must spend thousands. He takes the chance, not they. If such productions as "Virtuous Wives" fail to justify the money spent on them, it means bankruptcy to their producers. But here again "First National" is safeguarded. Our exhibitor Board of Directors, who contract for its attractions, have built their fortunes and the prestige of their theatres by experience and judgment. Their knowledge of trade conditions and composite judgment preclude the probability of unprofitable deals with stars and producers. We believe that our live and let live policy has at last won the confidence of the leading stars and responsible producers. We hope to merit their confidence.

Our hats off to Mr. Louis B. Mayer, successful exhibitor, successful exchange man, successful producer of "Virtuous Wives," which we trust will prove one of the big successes of the year and a vindication of our theories and policies.

And last, but not least—our congratulations to Anita Stewart. We count her sweet personality one of our great assets.

N. A. M. P. I. AND EXHIBITORS SPLIT

When Quorum Fails to Appear at Stated Meeting of Association, Schaefer Charges Intentional Absenteeism and Quits—Brady Says He Will Resign at Once

IF there ever was a chance that the National Association of Exhibitors and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry would unite in one organization that chance went a glimmering when the meeting of the latter organization, called for 11 o'clock on Tuesday, December 10, failed for want of a quorum necessary to transact business.

Ordinarily, when quorums fail to appear, meetings are put off to a more favorable date, but there was a suspicion in this case that the failure on the part of the N. A. M. P. I. to produce a sufficient number of its members to transact the business in hand was premeditated by certain branches of that organization, and that failure was immediately construed by the representatives of the exhibitors to mean that the unrepresented branches were antagonistic to the proposition and took that method of declaring their opposition to the more open method of appearing and stating their attitude on the floor of the meeting.

Exhibitors Announce Withdrawal.

The result was that the representatives of the exhibitors declared it was their intention to withdraw forthwith and entirely from participation in the affairs of the N. A. M. P. I. and hereafter to devote their time and their energy toward building up a real exhibitors' organization. Official action will be taken along those lines as rapidly as the machinery of the exhibitors' organization can be put in motion.

No particular surprise was occasioned by the announcement to that effect when made by President Schaefer of the Exhibitors' Association, since it was pretty generally understood that the exhibitors throughout the country did not look with favor upon the plan for various reasons.

There was some attention given to a statement which President Brady read into the record before he declared the meeting dismissed, in which he said he would call a meeting of the board of directors of the N. A. M. P. I. and tender his resignation to take effect at the earliest possible moment. However, this may be subject to amendment.

Roll Call Develops No Quorum.

The meeting, what there was of it, was called to order about 11:20 o'clock by President Brady, who asked that the roll of members be called. This developed the fact that only the exhibitors and the General Branch (Branch 5), had a quorum present. The producers' and the distributors' branches were represented by but one member, Mr. Gradwell, of World Pictures. Whereupon Mr. Brady declared that there was no quorum, and that the objects for which the meeting was called could not be discussed.

Schaefer Serves Notice.

P. J. Schaefer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, thereupon said: "There has been ample notice given of the holding of this meeting, so that there is no excuse for those who have not attended. I wish to serve notice now that I shall call a meeting of the directors of the Exhibitors' Association immediately and recommend that our organization withdraw from all further negotiations with the N. A. M. P. I."

This was immediately followed by a statement by President Brady, who said: "I have been president of this organization for the past two and a half years, giving my time and my own money for my traveling expenses. I consented to remain in office for another year or during the crisis occasioned by the war, when my friends at the Boston meeting urged me to stay. The war is over, and I now wish to say that I shall call a meeting of the directors of the N. A. M. P. I. and present my resignation to them as president to take effect at the earliest possible moment. The meeting is adjourned."

Mr. Brady picked up his hat and quickly disappeared without further comment. Those remaining gathered into little groups and discussed the sudden events of the day.

Black Considers Action Affront.

Alfred Black, a member of the board of directors of the exhibitors' organization, said that he considered the absence of the producers and distributors as a direct affront to the exhibitors and that he was willing to go on record as believing that the producers were afraid that the proposed plan would have resulted in a strong exhibitor organization and, consequently, had absented themselves from the meeting.

Mr. Gradwell of World Pictures said frankly he was opposed to the plan and would have voted against it if the opportunity had offered for the reason that he believed too much power would have been given to the exhibitors. As to the reason for the absence of the other producers he declared that he had no knowledge.

Mr. Schaefer said he was going to Washington that afternoon, but that he would get in communication with the members of his board of directors at once and advise them of what had happened as well as to the course he thought best to pursue.

"What we propose to do now," he said, "is to get busy and form a real exhibitors' organization. I am going to Washington today to see if we cannot get the film tax taken off and possibly get a reduction in the tax on admissions. We have tried to get the producers to co-operate with us on this matter, but we do not seem to be able to get co-operation from them."

Horstmann and Hespe Agree.

Ernest Horstmann, of Boston, and Dr. Charles Hespe, of Jersey City, both representatives of the exhibitors' association, agreed that the action proposed by President Schaefer was the only proper way to deal with the situation and that they were now satisfied that the producers did not want them in the organization. Mr. Horstmann expressed the belief that the proceedings, or lack of them, proved that exhibitors and producers could not be amalgamated.

Pat Powers of the Universal dropped in after the meeting had adjourned and shed his broad Tipperary smile over the assemblage. "I always get in after the explosion occurs," he remarked as he assimilated an earful of information and looked over the place where the explosion occurred.

Jules Brulatour of the Eastman Company was also a late arrival. He brought his benignant smile with him and wanted to know what it was all about.

After that the assembled members gradually slipped away to engage in their usual vocations.

President Schaefer Makes Statement.

Prior to leaving for Washington Thursday night, December 12, where, with Alfred Black he had an engagement to discuss tax matters with Chairman Kitchin of the Ways and Means Committee, President Schaefer issued a statement covering the situation as it appeared to him after the fiasco of the N. A. M. P. I. meeting on Tuesday. Mr. Schaefer recites the facts as stated in the Moving Picture World's story of

SENATE COMMITTEE AMENDS TAX BILL

Seating and Admission Imposts Remain Unchanged, but Levy on Rentals Is Cut in Half

At last the Senate Finance Committee has reported the new revenue bill which will, when it becomes law, take the place of the measure in force in 1918. The new bill as originally framed by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives was calculated to provide a revenue of $8,000,000,000, but owing to the cessation of war and the stoppage of large expenditures for munitions and other warlike expenses it was believed that $6,000,000,000 would be sufficient for the needs of the Government and the schedules were accordingly reduced by the Senate Finance Committee.

Though not as great as was proposed by the Ways and Means Committee the schedules as revised by the Senate committee afford little comfort to the motion picture interests. The seating tax will remain the same. The admission tax has not been changed from that of last year. Instead of 10 per cent. being levied on the gross rentals of motion pictures this tax has been reduced to 5 per cent. This is to take the place of the film tax placed upon raw material and positive prints as in effect in 1918. As reported the bill affecting motion pictures reads as follows:

TITLE VIII. — TAX ON ADMISSIONS AND DUES.

Sec. 800. (a) That from and after———there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 700 of the Revenue Act of 1917—

(1) A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place on or after such date, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission.

(2) In the case of persons (except bona fide employes, municipal officers on official business, persons in the military or naval forces of the United States when in uniform, and children under twelve years of age) admitted free or at reduced rates to any place at a time when and under circumstances under which an admission charge is made to other persons, a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the price so charged to such other persons for the same or similar accommodations, to be paid by the person so admitted;

(3) Upon tickets or cards of admission to theatres, operas, and other places of amusement, sold at news stands, hotels, and places other than the ticket offices of such theaters, operas, or other places of amusement, at not to exceed 50 cents in excess of the sum of the established price therefor at such ticket offices plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 10 per centum of the amount of such excess; and if sold for more than 50 cents in excess of the sum of such established price plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 50 per centum of the whole amount of such excess, such taxes to be returned and paid, in the manner provided in section 903, by the person selling such tickets;

(4) A tax equivalent to 50 per centum of the amount for which the proprietors, managers, or employes of any opera house, theater, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets or cards of admission in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor, such tax to be returned and paid, in the manner provided in section 903 by the person selling such tickets;

(5) In the case of persons having the permanent use of boxes or seats in an opera house or any place of amusement or a lease for the use of such box or seat in such opera house or place of amusement (in lieu of the tax imposed by paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 10 per centum of the amount for which a similar box or seat is sold for each performance or exhibition at which the box or seat is used or reserved by or for the lessee or holder, such tax to be paid by the lessee or holder; and

(6) A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any public performance for profit at any roof garden, cabaret, or other similar entertainment, to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise; the amount paid for such admission to be deemed to be 20 per centum of the amount paid for refreshment; service, and merchandise; such tax to be paid by the person paying for such refreshment, service, or merchandise.

(b) No tax shall be levied under this title in respect to any admissions all the proceeds of which inure exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational, or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations, or organizations conducted for the sole purpose of maintaining symphony or orchestras and receiving substantial support from voluntary contributions, or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States, or admissions to agricultural fairs none of the profits of which are distributed to stockholders or members of the association conducting the same.

(c) The term "admission" as used in this title includes seats and tables, reserved or otherwise, and other similar accommodations, and the charges made therefor.

(d) The price (exclusive of the tax to be paid by the person paying for admission) at which every admission ticket or card is sold shall be conspicuously and indelibly printed, stamped, or written on the face or back thereof, together with the name of the vendor if sold other than at the ticket office of the theatre, opera, or other place of amusement. Whoever sells an admission ticket or card on which the name of the vendor and price is not so printed, stamped, or written, or at a price in excess of the price so printed, stamped, or written thereon, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $100.

(5) Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than two hundred and fifty, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity of more than two hundred and fifty and not exceeding five hundred, shall pay $100; having a seating capacity exceeding five hundred and not exceeding eight hundred, shall pay $150; having a seating capacity of more than eight hundred, shall pay $200. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theatre, and not including edifices owned by religious or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations where all the proceeds from admissions inure exclusively to the benefit of such institutions, societies or organizations or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States: Provided, That in cities, towns, or villages of five thousand inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated: Provided further, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the time the tax is due, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to the lease.

Sec. 901. That if any person manufactures, produces or imports any article enumerated in section 900 or leases of licenses for export any positive motion picture film containing a picture ready for projection, and, whether through any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, or otherwise, sells, leases or licenses such article at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor, either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person, or (b) with intent to cause such benefit, the amount for which such article is sold, leased or licensed shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received from the sale, lease or license of such article if sold, leased or licensed at the fair market price.

Sec. 903. That every person liable for any tax imposed by section ——, shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed on by such section to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

The tax shall, without assessment by the Commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per centum, together with interest at the rate of 1 per centum for each full month, from the time when the tax becomes due.

Sec. 905. That on and after the 1st day of ———, 1919, any person engaged in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition positive motion picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax in respect to carrying on such business equal to five per centum of the total rentals earned from each such lease or license during the preceding month. If a person owning such a film exhibits it for profit he shall pay a tax equivalent to 5 per centum of the fair rental or license value of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited. If any such person has prior to ———, 19—, made a bona fide contract with any person for the lease or licensing, after the tax imposed by this section takes effect, of such a film for exhibition for profit, and if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of the tax imposed by this section to the amount to be paid under such contract then the lessee or licensee shall, in lieu of the lessor or licensor, pay so much of such tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. The tax imposed by this section shall be in lieu of the tax imposed by subdivisions (c) and (d) of Section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

the Tuesday meeting regarding the determination of the exhibitors to withdraw from negotiations with the N. A. M. P. I. and the resignation of Mr. Brady as president of that organization, after which, addressing the exhibitors and theatre owners of the United States he says:

"From the foregoing it seemed to be conclusive to all the exhibitors present that the manufacturers and distributors would prefer to continue the admitted present chaotic conditions rather than to endorse a movement that would organize the exhibitors branch of the industry in a proper manner. The manufacturers and distributors evidently fear that the exhibitors' branch might not act fairly when so organized and might fail to exert the power that they would possess for the benefit of the whole industry.

"Certainly the admission of this weakness on the part of the manufacturers and distributors is conclusive that it is necessary for the exhibitors of the United States to perfect an organization independent of all the others in the industry, in order to protect and encourage their business in every way possible.

The By-Laws Committee of the Amalgamated League will be asked to frame the new by-laws for the new Exhibitors' League upon such a basis. It should become evident to every exhibitor and picture theatre owner in the United States that it is imperative for the future success of his own business to become identified with this movement at once.

We should control our own destinies and not be controlled. The result of these recent events must finally bring the realization to exhibitors that they must act. I appeal to every exhibitor and theatre owner in the United States to join this new exhibitor movement—a movement that will make the exhibitors one of the most powerful organizations in the United States. It is well within their power so to be."

GOLDFISH PREDICTS NEW SCREEN ERA

In Sensational Talk to Minneapolis Exhibitors Goldwyn Chief Denounces Trade Evils and Deplores Financial Conditions, but Says Change Is in Sight

By William E. Mulligan

MOVING pictures, as much as anything else, won the war, and the next President of the United States will be elected or defeated on the screen, according to Samuel Goldfish of New York, who addressed a gathering of moving picture men of the Northwest at the Radisson Hotel in Minneapolis Saturday, December 7.

Mr. Goldfish made some of the most startling and gripping exposures of the inner workings of the moving picture industry and its achievements ever heard in this territory. He predicted many changes and a great revival.

"The pictures won the war as much as any other thing outside of the actual fighting," he said. "This may sound like an extraordinary claim or boast, but I know that it's true. I've heard Mr. Baker say it; I've heard President Wilson say so.

Morale Fortified Through Screen.

"There was a time when the French nation was bleeding to death. They kept telling the people that the Americans were coming, but they couldn't believe it; they had to be shown something besides newspaper reports. We sent the pictures showing that America was actually mobilizing its armies, that it was building great ships, that it was making actual preparations on an enormous scale for war. And let me tell you that when the pictures came the entire morale of the nation was raised. The pictures saved the day. The screen also kept up the morale of the American soldiers. This was demonstrated by the fact that as soon as a man came out of the trenches, even before he had his bath, he was taken to a hut, where pictures that bolstered up his spirit were shown."

Mr. Goldfish told of film propaganda which is now being carried on in Mexico and Siberia. "There are now 150 camera men and 1,000 operators following the American and Allied armies in Siberia, showing what America is doing to offset German propaganda," he said.

Screen a Power in Next Election.

"The producer doesn't know his strength," he added, "and likewise the exhibitor doesn't know his strength. But they are fast realizing their power, and I make the prediction that the next President of the United States will be elected or defeated on the screen."

But with only 60 per cent. of the theaters of the country now operating, the most critical situation in the history of the moving picture industry is faced, according to Mr. Goldfish.

The influenza epidemic, lack of co-operation between producers, distributors and the employment of "petty larceny tactics" by certain interests and individuals were blamed for the crisis by Mr. Goldfish, who in the next breath predicted a change in the situation and a glowing future for the moving picture, which, he said, was destined to become one of the greatest American institutions from an educational, political and recreational standpoint, ranking with high class drama, art and literature.

More than sixty moving picture theater proprietors of Minneapolis, St. Paul, Minnesota and North Dakota towns were present at the gathering. The addresses followed a dinner given by John Hicks, manager of the Minneapolis Goldwyn exchange, in honor of Mr. Goldfish, who is president of the Goldwyn corporation, and S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres of New York City, formerly manager of the Minneapolis Lyric. I. H. Ruben, of Ruben and Finkelstein, owners of a chain of theatres in downtown Minneapolis and St. Paul, was the toastmaster.

The uplifting of the screen was the keynote of all addresses. When this is accomplished, Mr. Goldfish said, the screen will enter a new era.

"The moving picture is coming into its own," he said. "The day of the old melodrama and claptrap picture is dead. The great spectacle is dying. The unclean picture is no longer popular. What the people want is a clean-cut story, and we must give it to them.

Crooks Have Got to Get Out.

"But in the meantime the moving picture industry is confronted with a serious financial crisis. Though it sounds unbelievable, I want to say to you that in the industry, which is rated as the fourth largest in the United States, there isn't a producer in the United States today who is paying a dividend. And the banks will not loan them money. This condition is largely our own fault, because of lack of co-operation with the exhibitor and the practice of unscrupulous methods by certain distributors and exhibitors, who have tried to dominate the movie market. Some exchange men have been robbing you, but you can cure this ill. All the fly-by-night exchange crooks have got to get out, and the same is true of the exhibitor who resorts to unfair methods. It's been a case of 'dog eat dog.' From now on we are going to build and reorganize. The day of domination is over."

"Get Out of Rut," Says Rothapfel.

Mr. Rothapfel urged exhibitors to "get out of their rut" by using psychology in showing the right kind of pictures. "Don't depend on Marie, 'Doug,' or Charlie, nor the spasmodic star," he said. "Your motto should be: 'No star is greater than my theatre.' I've proved it. You can't give the public what it wants for two reasons. First, the public doesn't know what it wants. Second, you don't know what the public wants."

In introducing Mr. Goldfish as the principal speaker, Mr. Ruben said: "Many exhibitors have a feeling that producers and big distributors are out with a club to take advantage of them at every opportunity. But after talking with Mr. Goldfish that feeling has been entirely dispelled, and I know that he is working in the interest of the moving picture industry as a whole."

Goldfish Would Talk Over Troubles.

"I want you to know that I have no horns on me," said Mr. Goldfish. "I didn't take this trip to sell any pictures or do any business for my company. I took this trip to meet the exhibitor, to tell him of the situation facing the producer, to talk over our troubles in common, and to do whatever I can to uplift and better the screen.

"I wanted to meet the 'poor down trodden devils' that I had heard so much about, the poor exhibitors. And I have met those poor devils all over the country. Some of them I found had 'only' a string of ten or fifteen theatres; and I didn't think they needed a very great deal of sympathy, but they were not all fixed that way. The exhibitor has been perfectly justified in getting pictures just as cheap as he can, but attempts at dominating the market by unfair methods of competition are having a most evil effect. We, as producers, you as exhibitors, are facing a crisis at the present time. You must rise to the situation and try to cure it.

Speaking of the importance of the relationship between the producer and the exhibitor, Mr. Goldfish said: "You need the producer as much as he needs you. It's a fifty-fifty proposition. We must work for stronger co-operation and encourage competition to insure progress for the moving picture industry."

Exhibitors Not Always Militant.

Mr. Goldfish declared that the producers had made many sacrifices to the end that they might improve the screen, but maintained that the exhibitors had not been far-sighted and for the most part had done little to improve the situation. "In many communities exhibitors have been idle when their interests were threatened," he said. "They have not attempted to see what they could do to keep their theatres open during the influenza epidemic but seemed perfectly content to allow department stores and other large enterprises to operate without protest when their own means of livelihood was temporarily cut off.

"Have exhibitors put up their prices?" he asked. "Have they done anything to make the moving picture better? Some have, but the majority have not. Co-operation, organization, competition and foresight are the needs of the day."

Touching on the popular demand for pictures, as seen from the point of view of the producer, Mr. Goldfish said:

Can Make a Picture with Four Players.

"The day of the spectacle has gone. The people don't want the spectacle; they want the story. And you can make a real picture of four people with the right kind of a story as the background.

Gentlemen, do you realize that we are today inducing every famous author to write for the screen? We are accepting stories from authors in many cases without the slightest intention of producing them. We are paying men $1,500, $2,500 and more for stories, and are then putting these stories on the shelf. Why are we doing this, you ask? We are doing this to encourage the authors, to keep them from dropping out of the game, and to insure the best possible productions for the screen."

The importance of longer runs at theatres was pointed out by the speaker. "If producers have to hurry through with their productions just to accommodate a one-day run demand, pictures are bound to suffer," he said. "We want more time to perfect our work. We would rather charge you $75 to show a picture for two days than $50 for one day."

Too Much Apple Pie Will Nauseate.

Mr. Goldfish cautioned the exhibitors against killing their theatres by continually running the same old stars. He cited the case of a New York theatre which was ruined because it wouldn't give its audiences an opportunity to see new personalities. "People will get disgusted if they see the same old bunk every week," he said. "You can't live forever on what your making on these people. And you're killing Fairbanks, Chaplin and Pickford if you run them too often. I don't care how much you like apple pie; if you keep eating it long enough you are going to be sick. The same is true of the screen.

"If we in the producing end did the same as you are doing we would have been where we were five years ago. The industry has got to do new things, and the producer has realized that fact. He is giving you and the public a new personality and thought. Meet him half way; give the honest producer a chance. He is trying to better the game. Do your part and encourage competition.

No Room for a Kaiser.

"The day of domination is gone by, but there is a Bolsheviki growing in this world, and that may be as bad. Don't make a Bolsheviki of the producer. Be fair to him. There can't be a kaiser in the moving picture industry, whether it be in the producing or exhibiting field. We all want our just share.

"I know of one town where an exhibitor controls practically all the theatres, which net him above expenses about $10,000 a week. This poor exhibitor admitted to me that he had taken advantage of his power. He said: 'It's a biased market and I'm going to take advantage of it. You can't blame me.' This is an intolerable situation and there must be a change.

"Many exchangemen are robbing the exhibitors, too. A manager offers you a picture for $50 and goes across the street and offers it for $500. But you can cure these evils, and I know that you will. All the fly-by-night exchange crooks have got to get out. The same is true with the unscrupulous and dominating exhibitor who tries to manipulate the market. There is a cure for all these evils. Let's get together. We want to help you. Help us.

"I want to assure you on behalf of every producer that's on the level, and those are the only kind who are going to remain in business, that we want to work with you. I'll give you my word—and I don't care if I make a dollar this year, the next or the next after that because I have all the money I need—that I'll go on and fight for the democracy and uplift of the screen as long as I have breath in my body. So help me God, I'm telling you the truth.

"I don't say I'm the savior of the moving picture industry, but I've done a lot to keep up competition and help it generally."

Farrar Brought New Clientele.

Speaking of some of the productions of Goldwyn, Mr. Goldfish said: "We didn't make $10,000 on Geraldine Farrar in 'Carmen.' But what did it do for the exhibitor? It brought in a new clientele. I saw such men as Astor and Colonel House attend a showing of 'Carmen' in New York. Do you think the old-line screen player would have brought in such men? No. The screen is not going to be improved or bettered in any way by salacious pictures or pictures of the old clap-trap variety. We want clean pictures and they are going to bring us the bread and butter."

Mr. Goldfish said that Goldwyn produced no war pictures because he felt that he would have been "building on sand." "You've got to build on a peace time, bread and butter basis," he said. "The future of the moving picture is the same as the drama. Remember the old fashioned melodrama you used to see? Well, you don't see it any more. And now the blood and thunder dramas of the screen are gone. Moving pictures used to be a catch-penny business years ago, and now it's getting down to a survival of the fittest."

Stars Getting Swelled Heads.

Mr. Ruben, in his address, said: "I am sure that all of you who have heard Mr. Goldfish talk will feel the same as I do—that he is absolutely on the level. We will have to dispel the feeling that has existed for a long time that we are being trod on by all the producers. I am sure we can overcome a lot of this petty larceny graft that has been going on for a long time. We must give serious thought to the future of the picture business.

Some picture stars are getting the swelled head, because they have been making too much money. They have quit their old organizations and the result is that we are going to be compelled to pay three or four times as much as we have in the past. We've got to encourage the legitimate organizations. The situation is serious and we must give it a lot of study. How is it possible?

We created the demand for the pictures which won them success. We are the ones who can answer the question.

"Let's be fair with them, and we're doing something for ourselves. I don't want you to think that Mr. Finkelstein or myself have been actuated by any selfish motives. Although we own a number of theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul, we have not been trying to take advantage of our fellow exhibitors or anyone else. I am merely saying this because I am trying to convince Mr. Goldfish that conditions he found in some cities where the moving picture game is dominated and controlled by one interest do not exist here."

Chamberlain Traces Progress.

The progress of the film industry during the past few years was traced by Dan Chamberlain, exhibitor of Fargo, Mankato and Faribault, in an interesting address.

"Time was," he said, "when people were ashamed to admit they had been to the moving pictures. Now our best society is finding the screen one of its chief forms of entertainment. The movies are an interesting topic in all homes. The industry is steadily improving and has a great future."

Other speakers were Joe Friedman of the Friedman Film Corporation, George Flynn of the Minneapolis Daily News, and Dan C. Pettijohn, representative of Mutual and the correspondent of the World. Following the meeting Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Rothapfel left Minneapolis for Seattle.

COLISEUM AT SAN FRANCISCO OPENS

Newest Picture House Is a Magnificent Structure—Cost Is Over Quarter Million—Samuel H. Levin, the Owner, Gives Opening Day's Receipts to Red Cross

WITH the dedication of the Coliseum Theatre, Clement street and Ninth avenue, San Francisco, on the evening of November 22, another magnificent residential district moving picture palace was added to the already substantial array of fine theatres for which the Bay City is noted. It is one of the few theatres erected during war time, and the opening was auspiciously timed, following the cessation of hostilities by less than two weeks

Samuel H. Levin, owner and director of the Coliseum, made a generous contribution to the Red Cross by giving the entire gross receipts of the opening night to the San Francisco chapter. The opening was under the auspices of the Park-Presidio Improvement Association, the Clement Street Merchants' Association, the Point Lobos Improvement Club and the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California. John A. Britton, chairman of the local chapter of the American Red Cross, was eloquent in his praise of Manager Levin's generosity, and wished him a full measure of success in the name of this organization. Supervisor Emmett Hayden represented the city, in the absence of Mayor James Rolph, Jr., while Major Meyer J. Cohen spoke for the film industry in his usual happy vein.

Section Reserved for Film Men.

Nearly every film man in the city was present as a guest of Mr. Levin, a special section having been reserved for members of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California. In order to make the house a hundred per cent. benefit for the Red Cross, Mr. Levin personally purchased this block of seats and presented them to his guests. The floral offerings of the various film exchanges and others connected with the business were notable, attesting to the esteem with which this exhibitor is held.

The Coliseum Theatre is a magnificent structure of concrete construction, occupying a prominent corner in the heart of the high class residential district between Presidio and Golden Gate Park. The location is unique in that this house is farther removed from the main business district of the city than any other theatre which aproaches it in size or appointments. The theatre is well named and is being featured as a "Downtown Theatre Uptown," its size, appointments and screen offerings placing it in a class with the very finest houses.

Cost More Than Quarter Million.

Erected at a cost of more than a quarter of a million dollars, it represents the crowning achievement in the career of Samuel H. Levin as a director of moving picture houses in this city. "I have sought to embody in my new house," he said, "every detail demanded by the public, with some ideas of my own that will prove to be a surprise to many. During the past fifteen years I have had charge of many local amusement enterprises, but could not find a landlord who would erect the palatial kind of a building which I wanted to house my latest venture, so I built it myself. I have purchased outright the land upon which the Coliseum is built, and have personally financed the deal in every detail." This investment is unique, since the entire transaction represents the work and faith of a single man.

The main facade of the Coliseum Theatre is severely simple in design, rather tending to emphasize the broad expanse of marquise and the width of the entrance than to direct attention to detail. The interior is suggestive of the same simple refinement, with the exception of the delicately traced design of the organ loft and the ornamentation of the prosenium arch. A heavy plush curtain covers the screen from view when the stage is utilized for musical acts, which are a feature of every bill. The stage is given a dignified touch by a baby grand piano left in view at all times at one end.

Seating Capacity 2,200.

The seating capacity of the house is 2,200, the balcony caring for about 700. About two hundred can be accommodated in the loges and half as many in the boxes. Much of the luxury which typifies the Coliseum Theatre is centered on the mezzanine floor, where a lounge and reception room extends the entire width of the building. Here are to be found comfortable divans, chairs and cosy seats, all heavily upholstered, with women's dressing and retiring rooms, free telephone booths, a miniature conservatory with a playing fountain, and a section for smoking. The balcony and log sections are reached from here by a short incline.

Modern to the last detail, this theatre is equipped with elaborate heating, ventilating and vacuum cleaning systems. The projection booth is located at the rear of the balcony and includes in its equipment two late model Simplex machines. On the ground floor is a parking station for baby carriages, with a nurse in attendance to care for youngsters.

Special attention is being paid to music on the program of the Coliseum. In addition to a large orchestra a Robert-Morton organ has been installed by the American Photo Player Company, and this instrument, presided over by Louis Diamond, is coming in for much praise. Manager Levin has access to the best musical acts that come over the Ackerman & Harris Circuit, one of which graces every bill at this house, as an added attraction.

Scale of Admission Prices.

Paramount and Artcraft pictures are being featured, and O. Henry stories and Christie comedies have also been booked. Four changes a week are to be made and prices are 10 cents for adults at matinees and 5 cents for children. Evening prices are 15 cents and 10 cents, with boxes 25 cents and loges 20 cents at all times. The hours for performances are 1.30 to 5 for matinees and 6.30 to 11 for evening shows, with continuous performances on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays from 1 o'clock to 11.

Oak in soft French gray is used throughout the house, and all aisles, stairs, inclines, as well as the foyer and mezzanine are heavily carpeted. The foyer screen extends part way to the balcony and conceals a battery of soft lights which illuminate the ceiling with a faint glow in any color desired.

"Fatty" Arbuckle Appears Unexpectedly.

"Fatty" Roscoe Arbuckle was a distinguished though unexpected guest on the opening night. He arrived at a late hour in tow of "Mike" Lewis, local manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who had just returned from a trip to Los Angeles.

Al Levin, brother of the owner, is assisting in the management of the Coliseum. He also edits a neat program and house organ, which made its appearance on the opening night.

World News Is Latest to Enter Weekly Field.

WORLD PICTURES has completed all arrangements to enter the field of the animated weeklies. It has perfected an organization to secure the momentous news of the world and to record it on the screen in a most interesting manner. Neither distance nor expense will be a deterrent factor in securing for patrons of moving picture theatres the very best service that money and intelligent discrimination of news values can secure.

Unbiased and unprejudiced news will be sifted from the mass of indiscriminate matter that so often in the past has been served to the public under the guise of timely topics.

"World News" will bring into the field youthful enthusiasm tempered by the experience of minds who have long understood the public taste through having had splendid experience in conducting the news columns of the best newspapers of the country. No propaganda will be permitted to creep in the screen columns, nor will any interest be permitted to use "World News" as the weapon to attack those who differ with them.

News as it is understood by those who are connected with this picture weekly is matter that the greatest number of people are interested in.

The first issue will be published about January 15.

TO PRODUCE FEATURES WITHOUT STARS

This Policy Announced by New Plimpton-Fischer Photoplays, Inc., Working on Initial Feature

ONE of the newest companies to enter the motion picture field is Plimpton-Fischer Photoplays, Inc., which will produce special feature productions. Work is well under way on the initial offering at the Plimpton-Epic Pictures studio at Sherwood Park, Yonkers, N. Y. William J. Reid is president of the company; Horace G. Plimpton, vice-president and general manager; John S. White, treasurer; Frank W. Rane, secretary, and David G. Fischer, director general. The directors of the organization consist of the officers, together with Rollin T. Lincoln, Donald M. Hill and James H. Kendall.

All of these are successful business men either in the motion picture field or in commercial lines. President Reid is New England division sales manager for Van Camp Products Company, a writer of note and a firm believer in the development of the motion picture along artistic lines. General Manager Plimpton was for seven years in full charge of production at the Edison studios, and two years ago organized Plimpton Epic Pictures and equipped the studio at Sherwood Park, which has since been used for propaganda and industrial work. Mr. White, the treasurer, is New England manager of the Morse Chain Company. Secretary Rane is State forester for Massachusetts; Donald M. Hill, who also is counsel for the company, is a member of the law firm of Blodgett Jones, Burnham and Bingham, of Boston.

Rollin T. Jones has for several years been connected with the Boston bond brokers, Clemena Parker & Co., while James G. Kendall owns and operates a large farm at Holden, Mass. Director General Fischer is an author and director, having dramatized for the spoken stage "Lavender and Old Lace," "The Purchase Price" and other plays. He was for one year a star and director for Essanay, and with the American Film Company for four years in the same capacity, then director general for Premier for one year and for American Commercial two years, and for two years director and author for the United Play Company.

The scenario for the initial production was written by Captain Richmond Pearson Hobson in collaboration with Mr. Fischer, under whose personal direction the production will be made. It is announced that there will be no star in the Plimpton-Fischer pictures, which will rely upon the theme and excellence of production for their appeal.

The title of the first production has not yet been made public. The cast has been selected and includes Vincent Coleman, Dixie Lee, Ashton Newton, Frances NeMoyer, Virginia Thorne, Harold Salter, Frank Readick and Charles Martin. The camera work will be under the direction of Stanley G. Mason, who started with the Biograph Company under William Bitzer, chief cameraman for D. W. Griffith.

Walter Irwin Resigns from Vitagraph Company

AT a meeting of the board of directors of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., held Monday, December 9, Walter W. Irwin, general manager and treasurer of the Vitagraph distributing organization, tendered his resignation which was accepted to take effect January 1, 1919. It is stated that differences of opinion on matters of business policy was the cause of Mr. Irwin's resignation.

Mr. Irwin was appointed to the position he now resigns in April, 1915. Previous to that he had no experience in the motion picture business. He says that he will retain his stock interests in the organization, but that he may start a company of his own after he has taken a real vacation.

HOW "HENRY" KEEPS HER SMILING

Having Contracted for a Full Season of Stage Work, He Most Obligingly Signs Up with Paramount for a Round Dozen of Drew Screen Comedies to Be Produced En Route

By Edward Weitzel

EVER heard of the positive person who set himself up as an art critic and discovered it was possible to make an embarrassing mistake? The awakening came to him while he stood frowning at a landscape in a public picture gallery. Turning to the man next to him the critical gentleman demanded in a tone of mingled pain and disgust:

"Who ever saw a sunset like that?"

"I have," was the quiet reply.

"Where?" incredulously.

"In Venice—when I painted the picture four years ago."

Neat way of stopping all argument, wasn't it? Well something very like that happened when Mr. Sidney Drew told Mrs. Sidney Drew that he didn't believe any man ever acted in the way Henry of the Ancient and Honorable Order of Muchly Married Men was supposed to conduct himself in a movie that hit the bull's eye of popular approval. The conversation took place bright and early one morning almost before the creator of Henry had his eyes open. Sitting up in bed he addressed his wife thus:

"My dear, I've been thinking all night about the pieces of new business you put in for Henry at the rehearsal yesterday, and I'm afraid they won't go." The director of the Drew comedies sat up in bed also and looked across at the gentleman whose chief business in life is to "Keep Her Smiling."

"Won't go? Why not?" she asked.

"Because, no man ever did such things."

"Yes, they have, dear! I've seen my father more than once do everything about the house I've given you to do in the picture."

Right here is the secret of the unique success made by the Drew comedies. They are amusing slices of life; skillfully transplanted bits of human experience that awaken kindly laughter and pleasant memories. Their characters are the sort of folk you are glad to know—to have as neighbors, if you live in a place where people own their homes and take their supplies from the grocery boy at the kitchen door in place of having things sent up on the dumb waiter.

A Good Day's Work.

It was 5 o'clock in the afternoon when the interviewer rang the bell of the Drew apartment on Park avenue and was told that the master and mistress were expected every minute. At five-fifteen they arrived. After spending the better part of the day at the studio, hard at work on a picture with the promising title of "Harold, the Last of the Saxons," they had hurried home for dinner, and by seven-thirty must be in the Majestic Theatre, Brooklyn, making up for their parts in "Keep Her Smiling." A short session and a quick getaway seemed about the order of things for the waiting interviewer. Nothing like that happened.

Mr. Drew came into the room with the air of being anything but pressed for time. A moment later Mrs. Drew followed, and almost her first words were.

"I'm sorry we were late, but sit down and we'll have a nice long chat." There was not the slightest indication of weariness in her voice and once the object of the meeting was under discussion she displayed the deepest interest and an unflagging animation. A long rehearsal, an interview and an evening performance may be said to costitute a good day's work. When this was suggested it brought forth a deprecatory shake of the head from Sidney Drew and the information:

"That isn't a day's work for Mrs. Drew. After we get home tonight she'll put in an hour or so reading scenarios and discussing the one we're doing now. Every odd moment we have we talk over and turn inside out the plot and the business of one or more of the pictures we're going to produce."

"Aren't you afraid you'll be held up as a terrible example of a slave-driving husband?"

Again Sidney Drew shook his head deprecatingly, gave his wife one of those never-to-be equaled Henry glances of admiration and pretended to whisper behind his hand:

"This is not for publication, but I just have to let her work as hard as she wants to: "It's the only way I can keep her smiling."

"Attention! Scenario Writers!"

"Playing a theatrical season on the road and producing moving pictures en route is an invention of your own, I understand, Mrs. Drew?"

The lady in the corner of the sofa showed that her stock of smiles was not running low:

"Yes; the idea was mine, but we've divided the management of the two branches of business: I work for Mr. Drew at the theatre, as it were, and he works for me at the studio. We are to make twelve Paramount-Drew Comedies a year, all two-reels in length."

"How many are finished?"

"Three. The first to be released will be 'Romance and Ring.' Then come 'Once a Mason' and 'The Amateur Liar.'

"Have you selected the dozen scenarios?"

"No, indeed! Please say so in your interview. We shall be glad to read every scenario that may be sent in. We want real stories about amusing people, and prefer to have more characters and more complications than in our one-reelers."

"You made fifty-two of them a year, didn't you?"

"Yes. And we never could have succeeded so well without our friends. They didn't always know it, but they helped us get many a story right. Down at our summer home at Sea Gate we'd sit around the dinner table and Mr. Drew or I would start a discussion over a situation in a scenario and get everyone's opinion as to whether or no a man would do as the author suggested. This would give us a line on how the situation might strike the public and perhaps show us how to improve matters."

"Speaking of the house at Sea Gate, hasn't it been used for interiors in your pictures?"

"More than once. We are great believers in having the sets absolutely correct and our kitchen has been the scene of several movie squalls."

"That is why you and Mrs. Drew always looked as if you truly belonged there!"

"Why not?" asked Mr. Drew. "It should be easy for a man and his wife to make themselves at home in their own house."

"You'll find it difficult to secure such interiors on the road."

"We're going to try for them, at any rate."

Here is the foundation of the Drew method of screen production: Consistent and constant endeavor. The amount of work necessary to complete one of their pictures demands every moment of time that can possibly be utilized. Asked to relate some amusing mistake incident to the making of one of the comedies, Mrs. Drew said seriously:

"Nothing that happens when we're working on a picture is ever funny to us."

Texas Managers' Association to Hold Meeting in January

MUCH interest is being evinced in the meeting of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association, which is scheduled to meet in Dallas early in January. Secretary Lew Remy says that he expects all attendance records to be broken owing to the importance of some of the subjects which are coming up for discussion. The meeting was to have been held early in November, but was postponed on account of the influenza situation.

Perhaps the principal subject which will be discussed by the motion picture men will be the proposed Texas fire prevention law which will be submitted to the next legislature. Many exhibitors, especially those living in the smaller towns of the State, believe the measure is drafted is too stringent.

The law as proposed gives the state fire marshal or his deputies power to order the power and lights cut off in any theatre without formality of notice should fire prevention conditions be deemed not up to standard. He is to be the sole judge in the matter. There are also other sections of the bill which will be discussed in an effort to secure equitable legislation.

Lehrman Engages Jack Blystone.

Jack Blystone, who for a number of years has been associated with L-KO comedies, has resigned his position as general supervisor of productions to become a member of Henry Lehrman's staff of directors at the Sunshine Comedies studios.

About five years ago Mr. Blystone left Universal, where he had been directing, to go with Mr. Lehrman, who was then at the head of the L-KO organization. During the remainder of the time that Mr. Lehrman was with L-KO Mr. Blystone continued to direct under his supervision, and when Mr. Lehrman sold his interests to start the Sunshine Comedies organization, Mr. Blystone was made general supervisor of production at the L-KO studios.

The Kargers Move to Coast.

Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro Pictures Corporation, who arrived in Los Angeles on the eve of Thanksgiving, has leased a home on Western avenue near Sunset Boulevard. The Metro director general was accompanied from New York to the west coast by Mrs. Karger and their two babies.

The Late Frank T. Montgomery.

Frank T. Montgomery Dead

A MEAGRE report comes to the Moving Picture World by way of Dallas to the effect that Frank T. Montgomery, a pioneer in motion picture exhibition, had died in Kansas City during the last week in November. Mr. Montgomery made his first venture in the picture business in Fort Worth, Texas, in 1905, where he opened the Edison theatre. Succeeding in this venture he sold at a considerable profit a few years later and went to Memphis, Tenn., where he scored another hit as a picture theatre manager.

Picture theatres were modest affairs in those days, but Montgomery's Majestic was a revelation, and he coined money by reason of his advanced methods, subsequently owning three houses in that city. Late in 1910 or during the first of 1911 Montgomery sold his Memphis houses and opened a fine theatre in Jacksonville, Fla. Here he organized a large company and opened theatres in several Southern cities and one in Dayton, Ohio. While some of these houses were remarkably successful and placed Mr. Montgomery among the leading picture theatre managers of the country, the ventures of the company as a whole proved disastrous in the end and he was a heavy loser.

Since that time Mr. Montgomery has been connected with various picture interests and is reported to have had charge of the amusement concessions at one of the Army Cantonments. No further particulars regarding his demise have been received.

Quimby Off for Old Point.

Fred C. Quimby, general sales manager for Pathe, has closed his office and started on a fortnight's vacation at Old Point Comfort. Mr. Quimby has been working hard arranging the details of the launching of the Pearl White Serial, "The Lightning Raider."

Rosenbaum Goes to Los Angeles.

Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., who has been on the staff of the exhibitors' service bureau of the Fox Film Corporation for several months, has been transferred to the studios at Hollywood, leaving for the West last week.

"Vic" Fleming Will Film Presidential Peace Party

IN addition to supplying the President's Peace Ship with Paramount and Artcraft pictures for the entertainment of the delegates going to France, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has one of its former camera experts on board the ship in the person of Victor Fleming, now first lieutenant in the Signal Corps, and for a long time identified with Douglas Fairbanks pictures. Fleming will take pictures of the entire trip for the White House library and other purposes.

Lieutenant Fleming joined the Signal Corps soon after the war was declared. His work stood out, and he was sent to Columbia College, New York, for a special course in war photography. During the last few months Lieutenant Fleming was in charge of important Government work at embarkation points.

"Vic" Fleming is particularly well known around California motion picture circles. His work in Fairbanks films had attracted more than ordinary interest, and he has invented several appliances for motion picture cameras that have helped him to establish an enviable reputation in the cinematographic field.

Others of the Photographic Division of the President's Peace trip are Major John M. Campbell, General Staff; Major Frank J. Griffin, Signal Corps, and 2d Lieut. Leonard F. Felio.

Clara Beranger to Free Lance.

Clara Beranger, until recently a member of the World Film Corporation's scenario staff, has entered the free lance field and hereafter will devote her time to the preparation of original stories and continuities. Miss Beranger's experience as a writer of motion pictures dates back eight years, at which time she contributed a one-reel story each week to the old Edison company, then one of the leading companies in the production of pictures.

Miss Beranger is no stranger in the free lance field, having followed this method of marketing her product after her Edison affiliations. Vitagraph, Famous Players and other companies have produced her scripts. Previous to her connection with World Film she was a member of the Fox scenario department, while recently she prepared a number of Baby Marie Osborne-Pathe pictures, including "Milady of the Beanstalk", "Dolly Does Her Bit" and "The Voice of Destiny."

Pegler to Publicize Sherry Service.

Arthur James Pegler, who for the last two years has handled newspaper magazine publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation, has resigned to assume charge of publicity for the Sherry Service. Mr. Pegler is well known in newspaper circles and is a contributor to the magazine as well as author of several plays.

Perkins a Visitor in New York.

George F. Perkins, general manager of the Perkins Electric Company, 497 Phillips Square, Montreal, was a visitor in New York last week. His company is the exclusive distributor for the Simplex projector throughout the Dominion of Canada and maintains branches in Toronto, Winnipeg and St. John.

SHEEHAN TO MAKE TRIP TO EUROPE

Prior to Starting on Inspection Tour Fox General Manager Will Visit Home Exchanges

PRELIMINARY to a trip to Europe, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is now on a tour of all the William Fox exchanges in the United States and the Fox West Coast studios in Los Angeles. Mr. Sheehan, who will be absent from the home office a month, will make a thorough inspection and study of conditions in each of the branch offices, with a view to inaugurating changes in sales and service methods to meet the new conditions likely to arise during the reconstruction period following the war.

On his return from this tour Mr. Sheehan expects to start immediately for Europe. He will spend considerable time in France, Italy, Spain and Great Britain, as the rapid growth of the Fox corporation's business in these countries necessitates a close inspection.

One of the more remarkable phases of the growth of Fox product is the increase in the European demand for Fox pictures. This is true not only of Great Britain, but of the countries on the Continent—France, Spain and Italy. Mr. Sheehan recently appointed Field Carmichael, former manager of the William Fox branch in Detroit, as foreign representative of the Fox corporation, and Mr. Carmichael now is abroad arranging details for the expansion of Fox distribution facilities on the Continent. Mr. Sheehan will supervise and direct this work, leasing the physical quarters for the Fox branch offices in the various European capitals. An entire building in Paris will be leased, it is understood, as the home of the Fox films on the Continent.

Up to this time the Fox business in France, Spain and Italy has been conducted through offices in various cities, but it has become evident as time went on that these facilities were inadequate to care for the rapidly growing volume of business. Besides Paris, Mr. Sheehan will visit Marseilles, Madrid, Rome, Venice, Naples and other cities. He has worked out definite, detailed plans for the extension of Fox business in the countries named, and these plans call for the inauguration of the same system and methods as he organized for his company in this country with success.

The present extended trip is the first that Mr. Sheehan has made away from the home office is more than a year. Aside from solving the perplexing questions of film production and distribution which were an indirect development of war conditions, Mr. Sheehan also has played a large part in the assistance which the films have directly given the Government. The production of propaganda pictures, the devising of methods of co-operation with Uncle Sam in dissemination of American doctrines in foreign lands, and the working out of means by which the motion picture theatres of America could take part in the big war relief campaigns, have all come before Mr. Sheehan. In handling these projects he applied the same precision and organizing faculty which have brought him success as general manager.

One of the big problems which Mr. Sheehan handled just before departing on his trip was that of arranging for the re-employment of former Fox employes who left the organization to enter the war service. More than 400 men will find their old jobs waiting for them when they are mustered out of service.

Mr. Sheehan has active supervision of the establishment of Fox branch offices in Australia, South America and elsewhere throughout the world. He has recently been occupied with the extension of Fox business in Japan and China, carrying on a supervision by cable that has attained remarkable results despite enormous difficulties of distance and local conditions.

The foreign growth of Fox films has developed problems which required a close study of conditions in various countries. This growth has involved the employment of persons familiar with the tongues and the customs of countries to which the films were consigned. These experts translate the films' titles and reedit them when necessary to suit the views and manner of the countries concerned.

How long Mr. Sheehan will be gone on his trip to Europe is not known. During his absence Herman Robbins, his assistant, is acting general manager.

Gompers to Show on Screen Labor's Great Achievements

FREDERICK L. COLLINS, president of McClure Productions, Inc., who will soon release a film based on the life of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, announces that Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has signed a contract with the McClure company to appear personally in a motion picture based on his career and on the loyalty and helpfulness of American labor to the cause of democracy through the great world war.

Now that Bolshevism has entrenched itself in Russia, secured a foothold in the Central Empires, and is threatening to engulf other countries of Europe, the loyalty of Samuel Gompers and his associates in the American Federation of Labor stands out in splendid contrast to those who would disorganize the industries of our country through their wild ideas. Even before America entered the war Mr. Gompers took a firm stand against the spread of German and pacifist propaganda through the ranks of the workingmen, and from the time war was declared he and his companions toiled unceasingly to send our army and its vast supplies to the battlefront. It is this 100 per cent. Americanism on the part of labor that will form the theme of the film production in which Mr. Gompers will appear.

Henri Krauss
In Pathe's "A Vagabond of France."

Mr. Gompers' rise from humble birth to his leadership in American labor circles offers splendid opportunities for making a film that will grip the hearts of the people, and now that labor is preparing to play just as important a part in the work of reconstruction as it has played in the world war the timeliness and constructive value of such a picture is evident. Mr. Gompers' association with the leading characters of present-day history insures that the picture will have a marked historic value in addition to its entertainment features.

Material for the scenario of the Gompers picture is now being gathered by the editorial staff of McClure Productions, Inc.

Films Division Issues Leaflet on Its Pictures

THE Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information is distributing to exhibitors a leaflet announcing the U. S. A. Series, a collective series of two reelers, each dealing with some vital war activity, illustrating the methods and the successful results attained. The first of the series will be released December 23, with a new release following every two weeks. The pictures in the order of their release are as follows: "If Your Soldier's Hit," "Wings of Victory," "Making a Nation Fit," "The Birth of Bullets," and "The Storm of Steel."

Another portion of the leaflet is devoted to the successful war feature picture "Under Four Flags," calling attention to the unusual record of the picture in being re-booked in the Rivoli Theatre and giving excerpts from the reviews of the New York papers.

The leaflet is intended to call attention to all present activities of the Division of Films, mentioning the Official War Review and "America's Answer," the second official United States War Picture which has met with remarkable success as a box office attraction throughout the country.

Mayer Proposes Trade Shows.

Arrangements have been completed by Louis B. Mayer to hold a series of trade shows in behalf of the first Anita Stewart picture, "Virtuous Wives," in various cities of this country and Canada. It is Mr. Mayer's plan to send out four delegations properly equipped to tell the exhibitor how to handle the picture to the best advantage. These crews will carry samples of all the styles of advertising prepared for this picture, including newspaper material and posters.

New York Exhibitors Dine.

The New York exhibitors held their annual beefsteak dinner at Healey's, Sixty-sixth street and Broadway, on Wednesday evening, December 11. One hundred and twenty-five persons participated in the "eats" and enjoyed the entertainment provided for the occasion.

WILL MAKE PHOTO DRAMAS IN BOMBAY

Suchet Singh Will Take Back to India Full Studio Equipment and American Expert Aids

DURING the past two months a tall, dark-complexioned young man with snapping black eyes and a keen appetite for information regarding motion pictures has been calling upon picture men in every branch of the trade. He was deeply interested in the processes of making pictures and showed an unusual interest in the mechanics of the business; wanted to know what were the best devices and why; what were the best pictures and why and how; he also wanted all the best literature on the subject of making pictures. Then, after studying the subject to his own satisfaction, he began spending money for the best equipment money could buy and gave directions for its shipment to Bombay, India.

Suchet Singh is the young man's name and his purpose is revealed in his statement that he represents the Oriental Film Manufacturing Company of Bombay, India, which will commence operations as soon as the equipment of what will be a modern motion picture studio reaches Bombay and can be installed. Two American experts will accompany Mr. Singh on his return to supervise the installation and to assist in its operation.

This, Mr. Singh assures us, is the first effort to make pictures in India, and he is sanguine of success. "The only American pictures that have vogue in India," he explained, "are those which do not require much thought on the part of the audience. Your serials are popular, but American social drama is not understood. Our people have had little opportunity to become educated; very few of them can read. Pictures, though, are the nearest to a universal language with us, and we are keen for those pictures which reveal progress and customs. Our people are also interested in your Western pictures because of the scenes and the riding and the thrills; all of these things they seem to understand.

"It will be our purpose to depict native drama, and we have a wealth of material. Our history antedates the beginnings of Christianity and is rich in tradition and story—almost inexhaustible. There is also great diversity of people and language in our own country. Eighty-seven dialects are spoken in India and the customs of the people are almost as varied. This condition will afford a wide scope for our work, so that we have great hope for success."

Suchet Singh, be it known, is a graduate of New York University, having spent six years in New York while taking the course in that institution.

Christie Comedies Remain with Independent Exchanges

WHILE in New York during the past week, Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, squelched the rumors that have been afloat to the effect that their comedies would be handled through one of the program organizations, and stated that they would continue, as heretofore, to be handled through independent exchanges.

Mr. Christie also announced that early in the new year the Christie organization would start presenting one two-reel comedy a month in addition to the one-reelers it is now making. "Our investigation as well as reports from exchanges handling our films," says Mr. Christie, "convinces us that there is a demand for high-class two-reel comedies, made along the same lines as our one-reel offerings. Also, in a number of instances in the past, we have found that one reel did not offer us sufficient footage to handle some of the subjects in the manner in which we would like, and do justice to them.

"Under the new plan, it will be our endeavor to produce in two reels comedy subjects which are really of five-reel calibre. We are in touch with a number of the leading comedy authors in this country, who know the style pictures we want, that is, polite comedy subjects, and are confident that we will secure the best material the market affords."

Mr. Christie expressed himself as greatly pleased with the manner in which the Christie comedies have been handled by the independent exchanges that have specialized on them and given them the same kind of individual handling as is usually accorded to features.

Mr. Christie remained in New York for about two weeks and then left for the Pacific coast, intending to visit Pittsburgh, Atlanta and Kansas City on the way.

While the subjects or casts for the two-reel comedies have not been announced Mr. Christie expects they will include Bobby Vernon and Harry Ham, who anticipate being released from Government service at an early date. In a number of instances special comedy stars will be engaged for one or more productions, where it is felt the subjects are particularly suited to them.

WIND STORM DAMAGES COAST STUDIOS

Heaviest Blow in Thirty-seven Years Causes a Property Loss of $25,000 and a Few Minor Delays

THE hardest wind storm Los Angeles has experienced in thirty-seven years blew in on Sunday, November 24. Practically every studio in the city suffered some damage in the matter of glass roofs being shattered, sets being blown away, and other calamities. Most of the film plants had the debris cleared up in time to begin work by Monday afternoon, however.

At the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood the galvanized iron roof of the property room and shop, a building 44 by 150 feet, was blown away, along with many stage sets out on the lot. A large canvas tent being used for sets was blown down, the falling poles and torn canvas damaging and breaking a lot of circus property inside the tent. A force of carpenters was hastily got together to prop up other buildings that were threatened by the wind and to repair the wrecked sets. The damage was about $3,000.

The Lasky plant was damaged to the extent of $8,000, when the storm blew away the greater part of the glass stage roof and demolished five elaborate sets on the lot.

The Christie plant, nearby, lost about $1,000 worth of sets that had just been erected on the studio grounds for a comedy. With an extra force of workmen the sets were restored and set up and the players were at work by noon the next day.

The Griffiths studio lost its glass roof and several sets, besides other damages to the lot that approximated $5,000.

An entire western set on a hillside overlooking Edendale, owned by the Mack Sennett Company, was destroyed. This set included a water tank, a church, a saloon, dance hall and other structures. Sets in the studio lot on Allesandro street, for the use of the Sennett players and the Fatty Arbuckle company, were razed and smashed. It will take several thousand dollars to rebuild these sets.

The Hart, Metro, Fox, Weber and Goldwyn plants all suffered minor damages that did not delay production. The Ince sets were all taken down at the first sign of the storm, and Universal lost only a few canvas tops. The Chaplin plant escaped with one street set damaged.

The total loss to the west coast studios will be around $25,000.

Film Star in Accident.

Edna Purviance going down a steep incline in her car on one of the down town streets, was struck by a street car which was coming down the hill from another direction. The street car crashed into the automobile, causing it to spin around and dash against a telephone post, breaking the post and crushing the front of the automobile. With the exception of a rather bad shaking up, Miss Purviance suffered no injury.

Name of Eltinge Legalized.

Julian Eltinge, whose real name is William Julian Dalton, has filed a petition in the Los Angeles courts to have the name Julian Dalton Eltinge legalized for his use in the future, as it is the name under which he has made his stage and screen successes, and in which his property has been recorded. Mr. Eltinge has taken this step because of possible complications that may arise in time to come.

Health Department Produces Film.

The activities of the Health Department of the city of Los Angeles have been used as the basis for an educational subject showing the work done by the department in infant welfare tuberculosis clinics, and in other lines. Arthur Messier, member of the board and writer as well, has written a story around the theme, with the regulation hero, heroine, villain and everything; and various producers have come forward with the loan of their studios for the filming of the production.

D. W. Griffith loaned the use of his studio and sets, while Thomas H. Ince furnished the lights and a generator wagon to make scenes at the clinics. Universal gave lights to be used in dairy scenes.

The title of the picture will be "Not According to Precepts," and the players, including C. Edward Hatton and Grace A. Madden, who played the leading parts, gave their services. The picture will be shown at the Liberty Fair, then at various theatres in Los Angeles and surrounding towns.

Both From Same Town.

When Fred Niblo took the Enid Bennet company, of the Ince studios, to the Arizona desert for exterior scenes, he met a Dr. Zarro, a man from his old home town in New Jersey, who had known Niblo's family for years and who had kept track of the young actor's career and achievements after his entering a stage career. Niblo and the doctor "reminisced" about the folks back home for an entire evening in the heart of the desert.

Contract for Eight B. B. Features.

An announcement has been made by General Manager J. L. Frothingham, of the Bessie Barriscale Features, that Miss Barriscale will no longer release through the Hodkinson Company, but through the Robertson-Cole Corporation of New York, in the future. Eight features starring Miss Barriscale have been contracted for by the Robertson-Cole concern, the first of these pictures, "All of a Sudden Norma," to be released in December. The second B. B. production, entitled "The Trick of Fate," is now in course of production at the Brunton studio under the direction of Howard Hickman.

Katterjohn Plans Big Production.

Monte M. Katterjohn, who has just recently entered the ranks of film producers, is planning to film, as his first offering, a story that he considers his masterpiece. The story deals with a body of pioneer Americans whose adventures and struggles provided some of the most dramatic episodes in American history, but which has never before appeared as the basis of a film drama. Mr. Katterjohn had intended this story for an eight or nine-reel production, but his present plan is to confine the action into not more than seven reels.

Karger Arrives.

Maxwell Karger, director-general of the Metro Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles the day before Thanksgiving in company with Mrs. Karger and their two children, and were met at the station by a delegation from Metro's West Coast studio, who escorted them to the Hollywood Hotel.

Projection Booth on Main Floor.

One of the things that Manager Miller of the new California Theatre decided upon when planning his house was that the projection booth should be upon the main floor. His observation in the past has convinced him that in most of the big photoplay houses where pictures are thrown from the second or third balcony it has resulted in presenting distorted and out-of-focus appearances of the players on the screen, and to avoid this fault in the California he has had the projection booth built on a level with the screen. Every modern idea has been incorporated in the equipment of the projection booth of the new theatre, and several of the most approved models of projection machines are now being installed.

Notes of Local Theatres.

When Sid Grauman heard that the theatre might be allowed to reopen provided the managers insist on their patrons wearing flu masks he immediately got busy and rounded up several thousands of the masks from the various downtown drug stores. The next day the Health Board decided that the theatres should remain closed until such time as it would be deemed safe for the people to attend the shows unmasked. Now Sid is wondering what he will do with all his masks.

Studio Shots

THE Zoellner String Quartet, composed of internationally famous artists, took part in a scene recently staged for the Helen Keller production being filmed at Brunton. Miss Keller, who can neither see nor hear, responds to the vibration of music in a wonderful manner.

Jack Pickford arrived in Los Angeles from the East on the same day last week that Viola Dana, Harry Beaumont and James Kirkwood landed in town.

Helen Keller, Sightless, Laughs at "Shoulder Arms"

MISS HELEN KELLER, known throughout the world for her wonderful accomplishments despite her inability either to hear or see, recently "viewed" Charlie Chaplin's second First National comedy, "Shoulder Arms" as the guest of the comedian at his Los Angeles studio.

Miss Keller and Mrs. Anne Sullivan Macy, her constant companion and who has long served as the eyes through which Miss Keller sees the world, were Chaplin's guests at dinner. Afterward the party went to the studio theatre and "Shoulder Arms" was screened. Mrs. Macy, with her fingers on the palm of the blind girl's hand, telegraphed the scene to her. Onlookers declare that she led the laughter as the absurd situations developed, and that she did not miss one of the subtle bits of comedy.

A "Moving" Picture Indeed—Helen Keller "Sees" "Shoulder Arms."

Ohio Exhibitors Fighting to Legalize Sunday Shows

THE exhibitors of Ohio are conducting a campaign to amend the laws of the State of Ohio so as to legalize the showing of motion pictures on Sunday. The existing laws provide for a fine and imprisonment for any one who shows pictures on Sunday. There are about one hundred towns that are closed on Sunday and new ones are being added to the list daily.

An organization called the Ohio State Screen League has been formed as a result of a great many meetings of the exhibitors. This organization is co-operating with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and is putting forth real efforts to safeguard the exhibitors' interests.

Hat-Wearing Females Annoy Helpless Ottawa Managers

THE theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, are still bothered by two relics of the past, namely, the end-seat hog and the woman who refuses to remove her hat while seeing a show. The two are found in all local houses, although special effort has been made by managers to correct the annoying habits. Slides on which appear requests for women to remove their hats have been shown with frequent regularity. Poor man applauds—but woman still persists. It is a fact that nine out of every ten Ottawa woman wear their hats in the theatres. Can you beat that for a modern, civilized city of 108,000?

When the theatres are opened for the day, the first patrons invariably make a rush for the aisle seats and stick to them, regardless of the number of times that ushers place people in the inside seats of a row.

Hunting Comes to New York.

Gardner Hunting, assistant to Supervising Director Frank E. Woods, in the Hollywood studio, and an efficient and talented scenarist, has left for New York, having been appointed scenario editor of the Famous Players-Lasky studio in New York City. His work will largely be what it has been in the west. He will edit and supervise the continuities for photoplays and arrange the final work on the titling and cutting of productions.

Mr. Hunting's work will in no manner affect the administration of the Famous Players-Lasky main office scenario department, which continues under the charge of Robert A. MacAlarney.

Poland Writing for American.

Joseph Franklin Poland, New York fiction writer, has recently joined the scenario staff of the American Film Company, at Santa Barbara, California. Mr. Poland will write for Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fisher. The story of "Impossible Susan," a feature starring Miss Fisher, was from his pen. The story of a Minter vehicle, not as yet released, likewise was written by him.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

THE week that has just slipped by has shattered another delusion about western Filmland. The belief that the festive hurricane never visits our shores has been laid to rest in the same sepulchre where sleeps the fond idea that 95 per cent. of California's hours are filled with sunshine; that you could stop anywhere along a rural highway and gather a hatful of oranges without getting your hide full of buckshot; and that the steam radiators in apartment houses are intended for something other than ornamental purposes.

Last Sunday a hurricane, alongside of which, according to Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, who was born there, the Big Wind in Ireland was but a gentle breeze, visited our fair city. A tornado that tore down trellisses, played hob with pergolas, uprooted accacias, eucalyptus, lemon, magnolia, orange, olive, rubber, camphor, oleander, palm and pepper trees, ripped the roof from the prop room at Vitagraph, demolished a big set on Mack Sennett's foothill, damaged Fatty Arbuckle's scene dock, eloped with one of Dave Griffith's roofs, set the Lasky people back eight thousand dollars for broken glass, and deposed a tall and stately smokestack from its proud position on the brow of the apartment house wherein resides he who writes these memoirs.

Otherwise, it has been a pretty big week, punctuated with many important arrivals from the East. Those of us who, since the theatres have closed down have been forced to go down and watch the train come in for amusement, have been richly repaid.

New York Accommodation Busy.

Every time the New York-Los Angeles accommodation pulled in at the depot, either an actor, an actress, or a director got off. Mr. Alexandria, our popular hotel keeper, says he will have to put on an extra hack to haul the people to his hotel if the rush keeps up the way it has started.

Among the new arrivals were noted Albert Capellani, Jack Pickford, Viola Dana, Maxwell Karger, Peggy Hyland, Oscar Apfel, Forrest Stanley, and Henry B. Walthall and his new bride, nee Mary Charleson.

I went over to Vitagraph just after the storm and saw the damage done by the wind. There was the prop room with its dome gone, and its secrets open to the curious gaze of any one who cared to rent an airplane and fly over the place, and a street set that had been erected with great cunning and no telling how many feet of lumber leveled to the ground by the gale.

There is something fine and admirable in a movie street. I always get great pleasure in looking at one, but a movie street groveling in the gravel of the desert hillside, prone upon its stomach, is a sad sight. In the language of a well known press agent in his more careless moments, "I like to have wept" over its fallen estate.

An Accordion's Sweet Music.

There was not much doing at Vitagraph, everybody, except Bessie Love, being out on location. I watched Dave Smith direct Bessie, Charles Wheelock, Frank Glendon, Karl Herlinger and Otto Lederer in a scene from "The Enchanted Barn," where Bessie dives under a piano and comes up on the other side just in time to fall into the hands of a couple of villains, while listening to Paul Rondes make sweet music on an accordion.

After making arrangements to return and see Bill Duncan do some of his breakneck stuff and watch Antonio Moreno and other Vitagraphers act, I started back to Hollywood, from which destination, however, I was deflected by a battle.

I love battles, especially movie battles. The sight of the brave director-general, armed with a megaphone, ordering the troops to mortal combat; the sounds of strife; the foe advancing and receiving it in the neck, arouses and fires my warlike soul. The acrid smell of the smoke pots is sweet incense to my martial nose.

I love to hear the crackle of the machine guns popping like popcorn; the foe falling in rows like ripe beans before the reaper—it would sound better to say ripe corn, but we don't raise much of anything but beans out here, and I am very strong for local color—I can see a whole regiment go down before the terrain and lay sprawling around on the barrage with the utmost equanimity, because I know that the entire company will shortly rise, brush the dust of battle from its pants, proceed to the studio, and draw down good iron men for its day's work.

Gets Lost in the Scenery.

As I was proceeding along a pleasant road bordered on one side by a grove of the stately eucalyptus and on the other by variegated California scenery, I was arrested by sounds of a booming nature that indicated a movie battle proceeding somewhere in the immediate vicinity.

Plunging into the depths of the forest with the utmost bravery and utter disregard of danger, I immediately got lost, and after wandering around for an interminable time I emerged just in time to see the last fallen foe arise, and Elmer Clifton, who had been putting on war stuff for a Dorothy Gish play, with his cameraman and other assistants, fading into the distance.

After this I had a real mystifying adventure.

Charles A. Taylor, who is also known as the master of melodrama, opened up the Norbig studios in Glendale a short time ago and started making a big feature with a star that is totally unknown to the film world. Various stories of her wit, beauty, grace and ability to do anything in the world with horses began to circulate in the colony, but none knew her name.

Society reporters from the local press interviewed her, but always in the presence of Mr. Melodrama Taylor, and no one learned anything.

George Walsh in "I'll Say So." Peggy Hyland in "Caught in the Act."

Stars and Scenes in Two Fox Productions.

The company went down to the beach and made some location stuff, and the mysterious star drove a chariot with four horses in a manner that would have made Ben Hur ashamed of himself and the plot thickened.

"Star" Avoids the Spotlight.

"They can't pull any mystery stuff on me," I said, rubbing up my detective badge, "and so far as there being a girl in the movies who will not tell her name, bunk, bosh, and likewise stuff and nonsense."

I went down to the studio; I saw the mysterious star, and talked to her, and I asked her name in a polite manner, and she said, really, she could not tell. I talked to her father and mother, for in addition to being a mystery, she is at the same time one of the most chaperoned stars in the movies.

Neither Pa nor Ma would tell any names. Talking to Taylor was useless. He is somewhat hard of hearing and carries a little telephone exchange like a suitcase around with him. When you talk about the weather it works fine, but every time I tried to ask leading questions about his star, I got the busy signal, or the wires got crossed, or something got wrong with the exchange.

I walked around the studio and watched them make scenes for the picture. The story has a circus atmosphere. Frank Mayo is leading man, and little Ben Alexander is in the cast.

Finds a Star at Leisure Again.

They were making scenes of a sideshow and all the freaks were there. Real ones, too. A snake-skin girl, who is married to the living skeleton; a hula-hula maiden who is a real Polynesian; an oriental dancer and a Circassian beauty.

I found the star at leisure again.

"How," I asked, "am I going to tell people about your monalisa smile and how clever you are riding horses if I don't know your name? They won't know who I am talking about."

She shook her head.

"Suppose," I persisted, "that I write a piece and tell people you are short and dumpy, that you look 37, and that you squint?"

"That," she said sweetly, "wouldn't make any difference as long as you didn't have my name. They wouldn't know whom you were talking about, would they?"

She had me there.

"Your southern accent tells me you are from the South," I said. "What state?"

"Listen," she began, and I believe she was really going to tell me, but Taylor adjusted his phone to his ear and prepared to listen in.

That was as far as she got, but if anybody knows a good-looking girl from the South who can ride and drive horses and keep a secret, he might know who this mysterious star is—I don't!

Jane Lee Recovering from Operation.

Jane Lee, who with her sister Katherine is in Los Angeles making "Smiles," a William Fox Excel picture, has just recovered from an operation for abscess. While Jane was under the doctor's care the photographing of "Smiles" was halted for a week. Work was resumed last week, when Jane, none the worse for her experience, returned to the Fox studio at Hollywood.

TALLY ADVOCATES RUNS OF FORTNIGHT

Los Angeles Exhibitor to Build House Designed to Make Possible Longer Stays of Big Subjects

T. L. TALLY, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for southern California and Arizona, is to build a theatre designed exclusively for long runs on super-productions, according to a recent announcement from Los Angeles.

His decision is based on his opinion that with the new era of specialization in productions by stars, there will come a much higher quality in releases. This he believes will be the foundation on which exhibitors can make their plans for increasing the length of their runs and reducing the frequency of their program changes.

Mr. Tally has been contemplating the erection of a theatre in Los Angeles, but his plans for its construction were delayed by war conditions and the consequent lack of materials. Now that the War Industries Board has removed the ban on the commercial use of structural materials it is expected he will go ahead with his intentions to give Los Angeles an entirely new type of motion picture theatre.

"Events of the last few months," declared Mr. Tally, "are conclusive proof that longer runs are the thing of the future for exhibitors. We know to a certainty now that indefinite engagements of genuinely good pictures are profitable to exhibitors and that it is throwing money away to give only two or three days or a week to productions that have the merit necessary to longer bookings.

Long Runs Require Special Atmosphere.

"The public does not get a chance to patronize a worth while film if it is shown for one or two days. Every theatre will receive a certain amount of nominal patronage each day. But not every prospective patron—not one-fifth of the prospective patrons—could or would patronize a theatre within one or two days to see a production that is being talked about. There are many reasons for this. Some people are kept at home by illness, others are out of town for a few days, others are entertaining guests, others are too busy the first two or three days that a good production is shown. And a far greater number, who are not regular fans, do not hear comments on an especially worth while release until several days after it has opened.

"To play longer runs requires a certain type of physical equipment in a theatre which, while not absolutely essential to the success of indefinite engagements, adds enough to the atmosphere and general effectiveness of the productions to make the investment profitable. Of course, almost any theatre with the standard equipment can serve as the background for runs of a week, or even longer. But where it is possible to do it, and particularly in the instances of theatres being built, I believe it is a wise precaution for the exhibitor to consider carefully the advantages of special interior arrangements which will give him opportunities for settings, lighting effects, greater latitude in musical accompaniments, and which will contribute to the quality atmosphere imparted by the super-productions which the public will patronize, day after day, for runs ranging from two weeks to a month or longer.

Suit of Shuberts Over "Old Heidelberg" Fails.

THE value of the moving picture rights of the screen production of "Old Heidelberg," in which the Fine Arts Film Company starred Dorothy Gish and Wallace Reid is not to be judicially determined after all, as the result of the dismissal of the suit filed against the Fine Arts Company and the Triangle Film Corporation by the Shubert Theatrical Company.

When the suit was filed in the United States District Court several years ago the Shubert Theatrical Company demanded $25,000 damages, asserting that the motion pictures rights of the production were very valuable, but it is doubtful whether a court would place such a high valuation on the cinema rights at the present time in view of the unpopularity of German products.

However, it was not necessary to pass on the question, as Judge Meyer dismissed action on technical grounds, it appearing that the Shubert Company did not possess a legal claim to the exclusive rights of the play owing to the fact that the English version of the German play had not been protected by copyright in this country and consequently the film companies were within their rights in presenting a screen version of the play.

The play was originally dramatized in Berlin under the style of "Alt Heidelberg" from Wilhelm Meyer-Forster's novel "Karl Heinrich." Emanuel Lederer secured the American rights to the play and contracted with the Shuberts to produce it in this country.

The Majestic Motion Picture Company secured the rights from Max H. Schaaf, who translated the novel into English under the non de plume of Max Chapelle. This translation of the novel was copyrighted in this country.

Pathe Review Pleases Exhibitors.

That the Pathe Review, the new film magazine of interesting topics to be released by Pathe every other week commencing January 19, is going to be one of the most popular subjects ever issued by this firm, was evidenced last week when the first reel was shown to the trade on the roof of the New York Theatre.

The first release combines the famous Pathe color pictures with the highly amusing and exceedingly interesting slow motion process, and as an educational feature it includes scenes revealing the effect of music on wild animals.

The slow motion process was utilized in photographing a baseball game, and the flight of a baseball thrown by a speedy pitcher, floating through the air to the catcher, elucidated shouts of laughter. The slow motion process will be incorporated in the Pathe Review from week to week and the many opportunities for highly humorous bits in using this method of photography can be readily realized.

PRODUCT BELOW PAR, SAYS ROTHAPFEL

New York Manager Tells Chicagoans That Crisis of the Previous Year Has Not Yet Been Passed

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of Select Pictures Corporation, and S. L. Rothapfel, America's foremost exhibitor, arrived in the city Thursday morning, December 5, on their trip from coast to coast, during which stop-overs will be made at Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

At Cleveland, where the first stop was made Wednesday, December 4, they made addresses to a large gathering of exhibitors at a luncheon previously arranged by Select's Cleveland manager. In Chicago, Ike Van Ronkel, Chicago manager, arranged for a luncheon at the Hotel Blackstone, at 12.30 p. m., where about 100 prominent exhibitors were present, in addition to members of the daily and trade press.

Nate Ascher, of the Ascher Brothers circuit of houses, acted as toastmaster, and after paying a tribute to Mr. Rothapfel he introduced him as the first speaker, "Roxie" responded in one of his characteristic, stirring addresses, during which he succeeded in enthusing his hearers by a bright forecast of the future of the moving picture.

Present Product Rated Below Par.

He pronounced the past year a most trying ordeal for the moving picture and the trade, saying that a great crisis had been encountered and that it has not yet been passed. He considered the film product at present below par and that, in certain cases, big rental prices are being charged.

In exhibition he held that the safest plan tended more and more to the institutional value of the theatre—in other words that the picture itself is not the only thing, but the most important unit among other most essential things. Among these other things are service to patrons, in the way of politeness, comfort, etc.; scenic adjuncts, light effects and, next in importance to the picture itself, the musical accompaniment. He held that strict attention to these would result in the steadily increasing daily average of the receipts, in distinct contrast to the abrupt and irregular daily receipts which result when the picture only is depended upon. The institutional value of each theatre, he holds, cannot fail to exalt the business and bring greater dignity to the moving picture.

All the enumerated adjuncts to the success of the moving picture can be brought into operation only by the practical application of psychology to moving picture entertainment, Mr. Rothapfel insists, and, in proof, he pointed to the history of his New York theatres, the Rialto and the Rivoli.

At this point he complimented Balaban & Katz, owners of the Riviera, in Chicago, on their successful management of that house, which is conducted similarly to the Rothapfel theatres.

Mr. Rothapfel holds that the musical score of a well conducted picture program should be as carefully and fully developed as any grand opera score, and he advised that one should never get one's patrons into a rut.

Keep Your Patrons on the Edge.

"Keep them always on the edge of the seat," he cried, and he recommended the doing of things in a way different from that used by a competitor.

"The breaking of precedent—something different from what the other fellow does, is what counts in this business," he emphasized.

He then exclaimed against the present custom of giving the name of the director, the art man, etc., on the film, in addition to the title. He believes in a pictured showing of the motive of the story before the title appears, and that the names destroy the psychology effect thus created and delay the spectators from "getting into the picture."

During his remarks Mr. Rothapfel gave this advice to exhibitors: "Never cater to the public. They must look up to you as they do to the singer and the speaker. You can't beat the institutional value of the picture theatre."

He held that the relations between the producers and exhibitors should be more cordial and that closer co-operation should exist; also that exhibitors should pay more, if possible, for the rental of films.

Rothapfel Predicts Dollar Prices.

"The moving picture will become so big in the near future that we of this day fail to realize it," he said at this point. "In less than a year I shall be getting one dollar for every seat on the lower floors of both my houses in New York."

Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local, was next called upon. He praised the Goldwyn product and stated that not a single Goldwyn picture had yet been found unclean or unfit, even by the drastic Chicago censors.

Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn's president, was the next speaker and held his audience closely during an extended conversational address. This, at times, created bursts of merriment by the unconscious humor of the speaker, who was never at a loss to call a spade a spade or to hit an opponent hard in a playful manner.

He scored the exhibitor who wants everything in sight without taking any of the producer's chances, and cited in most humorous fashion a case which evoked great laughter. He charged that exhibitors do not co-operate with producers, as they fail to sustain them by the breaking of contracts for their product, which have been accepted by producers in entire good faith.

"Such actions may lead to a revolution on the part of producers," Mr. Goldfish asserted.

Producers Not Paying Dividends.

"When exhibitors meet in a body anywhere they usually get talking about prices—and lower prices," he said. "Yet not one producer has paid a dividend for the last two and a half years. I have put over half a million dollars in pictures and our company has done its utmost to make the best pictures, but the exhibitors won't let us.

"They want a star. All the producers in America are not making as much as one star. And who has made the stars? Who made Douglas Fairbanks?

"Exhibitors are facing a crime. They are killing 50 per cent. of the business.

"Producers must get the works of the best authors and must encourage them. Goldwyn holds receipts for many thousands of dollars paid for stories which are unused.

Producers Must Be Supported.

"Producers must have support and co-operation of exhibitors, and exhibitors must concede that producers must have their just share of profits.

"The day of domination by the producer has gone by. If conditions continue as at present, the producers must quit. The producers have borrowed money for the last two years. Don't ever force the producers to get together to protect themselves.

"Courage on the part of exhibitors to raise the admission price just five cents would mean so much! If exhibitors would do this much for the business they would save the picture.

"Our branch managers fail to meet an exhibitor who is making a dollar! The exhibitor succeeds in convincing even our branch managers."

In concluding Mr. Goldfish advocated the running of film subjects at least two days instead of one day, saying that it would greatly relieve the present conditions.

Chicago Censorship Board Bans "Finger of Justice"

OWING to inclement weather the meeting of the Chicago Censorship Commission, held Friday, November 22, was sparsely attended, and Chairman Hurley ruled that those present should remove to the projection rooms of the Chicago censor board, in the City Hall, and view "The Finger of Justice," which had recently been given a "pink" permit by Second Deputy Frazier, head of the censor board, who succeeded Major Funghouser.

This picture had been refused a permit in New York and the action of Second Deputy Frazier had raised a storm of protest. After viewing the picture, the members of the Censorship Commission present, with the exception of Secretary Quigley, voted against the granting of a permit, Mr. Quigley remaining neutral. John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, who was present, gave the opinion that he could see no reason for refusing a permit. Others present, among them Joseph Hopp, were of the same opinion.

Acting Chief Alcock, who was present at the viewing of the film, then declared that he would take the matter under advisement and give his decision later. The following day, Saturday, November 23, he overruled the second deputy and refused a permit of any kind, thus canceling the "pink" permit already issued.

"The Finger of Justice" was filmed by the Rev. Paul Smith, an evangelist of San Francisco, whose crusade against vice in the segregated vice district of the Barbary Coast, in that city, led to its exposure in films. The picture is being marketed by the Arrow Film Company, of which W. E. Shallenberger is president.

At the meeting of the Chicago Censorship Commission, held Friday afternoon, November 29, Chairman Hurley recommended the adoption of a resolution to the effect that the new Chief of Police Garrity and Second Deputy Frazier, the present censor of moving pictures, should not grant any white permits to pictures which depict white slavery or prostitution, without being viewed by the commission previously. The resolution was carried. About ten members of the commission were present on the occasion.

Chicago Exhibitors' League Discusses Vital Questions

THE regular monthly meeting of the Chicago Exhibitors' League was held in Fraternity Hall, Friday noon, December 6, about sixty exhibitors being present. Joseph Hopp, president, occupied the chair and the following matters were discussed.

The return of the "Flu" epidemic; the proposed increase in the wages of operators; the censorship question; the music tax and the revised war revenue tax.

Dr. Hill, a member of the Chicago board of health, who has charge of all matters pertaining to the health ordinance, was present. He addressed the meeting on the health question during the return epidemic, and also referred to the six houses which were closed during the week of Monday, December 2.

Among these houses were the Pine Grove, De Luxe, the Liberty, Oak and two smaller ones. They were closed as a warning to other theatre owners and managers, Dr. Hill said, because it was found by the board of health investigators that the ventilating plant in each case was not in operation during the time of showing pictures. The law distinctly calls for the perfect operation of the ventilating plant in every house, while people are in the theatre, and every house will be closed where the law is not observed to the letter.

Dr. Hill was then asked by exhibitors to state why it is that street cars, crowded and jammed with people, and big department stores and their crowded basements are permitted to run. He replied that there was no ordinance which empowered the board of health officers to arrest the officials of a street car company or to stop the running of such cars; also that each of the department stores has an approved ventilating system, which is constantly in operation.

The proposed increase in operators' wages was next considered, and it developed that in the fall of 1917 the operators had entered into a contract for five years, at 75 cents an hour for every day in the week, and that four years of that period have still to run.

Regarding the censorship question, a committee was named to represent the Chicago League at the meeting of the Chicago Censorship Commission on Friday of every week, until the work of the commission is completed.

With regard to the revenue tax the members of the League present favored the retention of the present admission tax and the 5 per cent. tax on film rentals (which producers and distributors pay) according to the newly proposed law.

Director Rex Weber Dies A Victim of Pneumonia

REX WEBER, better known by his home people as Fred Weber, passed away Monday morning, December 9, in this city, another victim of pneumonia.

It was only in the last issue that he was prominently brought before our readers by reason of his being mentioned as the director of the Herald--Examiner's "Smile Film," which he finished at the expense of his health, owing to the strenuous and protracted period of its making. It was really due to his untiring efforts and to exposure to severe weather during the making of the film that Mr. Weber contracted the dread malady which removed him so suddenly from his friends.

Mr. Weber has been a motion picture director for seven years, being employed at various times by the Lubin and the Vitagraph Company. He also directed various Red Cross films, and was consulting director in the filming of "The Birth of a Race."

Mr. Weber was thirty years of age and was born in Covington, Ky. His mother, Mrs. G. L. Weber, came on to Chicago from the family home recently and was at his bedside when he died.

High Honor for Edgar Hopp.

Edgar Hopp, son of Joseph Hopp, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Chicago, who is at present attached to the photographic division, Bureau of Navigation, U. S. N., recently received an overseas assignment to go aboard the Pennsylvania, the escort ship for the George Washington, which is conveying President Wilson and party to Europe. Mr. Hopp, Jr., will take all official motion pictures of this trip under the direction of Lieut. Wells Hawks, officer in charge of the photographic division.

Mr. Hopp, Jr., is the chief official motion picture cameraman attached to the photographic division. The pictures made during the voyage will form the official naval records of the trip.

Showmen's League Holds Services.

Memorial services in honor of deceased members of the Showmen's League of America were held in the clubrooms in the Crilly Building, Sunday, December 8, by a large number of the Chicago members of the organization. Prominent among those who hav passed away, to whom touching refer ences were made at the meeting, wer the late president, John B. Warren; th first president, William F. Cody, an Warren A. Patrick, founder of the or ganization and first national secretary

"The Birth of a Race" at Blackstone.

Sunday evening, December 1, th much-heralded picture, "The Birth of Race," was given its premiere at th Blackstone Theatre here—just about th most forbidding spot for the presenta tion of pictures. In the first place, th location is out of the way, and in th second it never before had been used fo picture entertainment.

I attended the opening and found th theatre filled, to a seat, downstairs, whil the balcony and the gallery had a fai sprinkling of first nighters. Of course much of this was "paper," but the at tendance has shown an improvemen every night thus far since, and the man agement is fairly satisfied with th results—taking everything into consid eration.

Blanche Sweet Blows Into Town

BLANCHE SWEET, dapper as ever blew into town December 6 on a business trip, and returns to the coast again this week to start work on her next big picture under the management of Harry Garson. Its name Miss Sweet would not divulge—neither would she give any inkling as to the nature of the subject—but when it came to "The Unpardonable Sin," which Miss Sweet has just completed, her enthusiasm was boundless. Miss Sweet declares it to be the biggest picture of the year.

The player recounted all her troubles of making "The Unpardonable Sin" during the "flu" epidemic. Marshall Neilan, the director, persevered, however, and the result has been beyond expectations.

The picture will be in nine reels instead of eight as previously announced.

It goes into Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, for a run beginning New Year week, after which it will be given a Broadway showing. Mr. Garson is said to have refused one of the biggest cash offers made for any picture this year.

SCHENCK SHIFTS TO FIRST NATIONAL

Head of Norma Talmadge Productions Company Tells Why His Star's Pictures Will Be Distributed Under Different Plan—Not Criticism, but Analysis, He Says

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., has signed a two years' contract for the distribution of productions starring Norma Talmadge. The contract becomes effective as soon as the four productions still to be made under the present agreement with Select Pictures Corporation have been completed and delivered.

"For the first time in my experience as a producer," declares Joseph M. Schenck, who is the active head of the Norma Talmadge Productions Company, "I am able to understand how it is possible for a producer to make bigger and better pictures with an increase in values at the box-office compatible with the added quality in the picture. To me this contract with First National is the solution to an ambition I have cherished for more than a year. I have wanted to make bigger pictures. I have wanted to pay the price demanded for big stories. Of course, there has been nothing to stop me but the uncertainty of whether I would do any better than break even on the investment. This was the fault not of an individual or group of individuals but of a system."

While the details of the contract are not made public, it is understood that First National will distribute a minimum of twelve Norma Talmadge productions during the two years the contract is in force, and that a total of twenty productions will be the maximum. By this system of keeping two directors constantly employed, Mr. Schenck plans to make at least six releases each year, allowing a minimum of six weeks' actual studio working time for every production.

Transaction Involves Large Sum.

Although the amount that will be paid by First National for the negative rights to each picture totals, in the aggregate, what is described as one of the biggest, if not the biggest, sum ever involved in a contract of this nature, it means, according to Circuit officials, that the Norma Talmadge pictures will, as a consequence of the increased latitude given Mr. Schenck in production, take on a proportionate increase in box-office value, apart from the exhibitors' advantage in booking them independently.

"Furthermore," declared J. D. Williams, manager for First National, "the exhibitors will book the Talmadge pictures exactly as they are booking the Chaplin, Pickford and Stewart releases, independent of anything else. Mr. Scheneck's features will stand absolutely on their own merits."

Mr. Schenck summed up his opinion of the contract with First National by describing it as "the revolutionary change of method which gives me the open door to greater quality in productions starring Norma Talmadge and to a realization of a profit from the superior releases I will place at the disposal of exhibitors.

Believes "System" Cannot Endure.

"First let me make clear," he requested, "that my comments are not in any sense a criticism of individuals or organizations, but an analysis of a system. For this system there can be no individual responsibility. It is universally employed by program distributors. That it cannot endure much longer is obvious to me. I have been producing pictures with Miss Talmadge as the star for more than two years. When I first took charge of her studio I received an offer of $750 a week for her services. Recently I was offered $7,500 a week by a program company. To have accepted it would have been fatal to her popularity. True, an income of $30,000 a month is better than a reasonable salary. The fact that I refused the offer was not due entirely to my belief that she is capable of earning more. It was also because I knew that to accept it would be to place her against a dead wall obstacle to progress, and would result in a decline in her popularity. Allowing six weeks to a production, her salary alone would burden each picture with approximately $60,000, because she would require ten days or two weeks of rest between pictures. Add to this about $40,000 for other expense, not including prints, advertising supplies and sales cost, and figure what it means to get back that sum.

"By having her productions distributed on the open market plan, whereby they are available to every exhibitor in the country, burden free, I receive a sum for each negative which is sufficient to give me ample latitude for obtaining the greatest possible quality, and which tells me in advance just how much I can afford to spend on production and still give me a profit. There is no guesswork. I know, under the contract with First National, just how far I can go. And when my negative is completed I do not need to wait a year, eighteen months or two years to get back my costs with a possible profit.

Sees Advantages in Ready Money.

"I receive my costs, plus a profit, when the picture is finished. The result is that I have the money immediately available to begin work on another picture.

"Some exhibitors who do not reason may say: 'It's a fine thing for Miss Talmadge. She can make cheap pictures and still be sure of a big profit. We won't get her releases any cheaper if they are not up to a standard.' But they should remember that a big profit on each of two pictures—which is the maximum that any producer could use to hoodwink a distributor—does not amount to one-tenth as much as a reasonable profit on twelve or fifteen productions of a quality that makes them big winners at the box office. A producer releasing through First National exchanges has everything in the world to gain by giving his utmost for the attainment of super perfection and everything to lose by attempting to take any advantage of exhibitors in failing to give them value received."

FACTS AND COMMENTS

THROUGH lack of a quorum to do business the special meeting of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry called to consider the proposition which contemplated the consolidation of the N. A. M. P. I. and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, that particular transaction was not consummated It would not be correct to say that nothing was done. On the contrary a great deal was accomplished, because the truth was finally brought home to the representatives of the exhibitors' organization present that it would not be good policy to thus sink their identity, and the president of that organization, who was present, declared that he would recommend to his board of directors that all negotiations be terminated.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD congratulates Mr. Schaefer upon his very wise determination. As we have pointed out repeatedly in these columns such a combination of interests as was proposed could never solve the problems which arise between the two branches of the motion picture trade. We were willing, nevertheless, that the plan should be given a trial, and as members of the N. A. M. P. I. would have voted in favor of it had the opportunity been given for no other reason than that its futility might have been conclusively proved. But the failure of two important branches of the industry to be present at the meeting, thus creating no quorum, and the action of President Schaefer in declaring his purpose to withdraw from any further consideration of the question clears up the situation.

Another event occurred at that meeting which is not quite so pleasant. This plan was strongly favored, if not conceived, by the president of the N. A. M. P. I., William A. Brady. That it should fail by the coldness of the men with whom he was most closely associated must have been to him a matter of deepest chagrin. That he resented the failure of his friends to support him was shown by his statement to the effect that it was his intention to resign his office and retire as quickly as possible. Whatever may be Mr. Brady's failings one fact stands out in his favor: he is the first man to be chosen president of the N. A. M. P. I. who has been able to keep the organization together and interested in the trade's welfare enough to accomplish anything. It has been hinted that Mr. Brady has other reasons for resigning, and it would not be difficult to find them, but if he is to continue in the picture business he should be induced to withdraw his resignation should he eventually present it. True, the job is a thankless one and more, but the organization should be so established and financed that its executive might at least be reimbursed for his traveling expenses. There is a great and growing need for a trade organization in the motion picture industry, but it should be conducted on proper business lines. Mr. Brady knows the amusement business; he is a forceful man and has proved his value to the trade. Under proper conditions he would be still more valuable and should be retained.

ASSUMING that President Schaefer will pursue the course he proposed, it will be up to the exhibitors of the country to support his efforts to establish a strong organization. We have named the reasons for such organization so many times that repetition now begins to sound like "parrot talk." There are so many things that exhibitors must and can do for themselves that it seems a crime when they do not get together and do them. Problems that arise in a given state cannot be handled so well as by the exhibitors of that state. Outside interference is more likely to be fatal than helpful to their cause. But nothing can be accomplished unless there is organization. So organization is the thing to be accomplished, and the time is now.

THERE seems to be a difference of opinion among our ministerial brothers of Indianapolis on the subject of closing picture theatres in that town on Sunday. When the ministerial delegation interviewed the Mayor on the subject and presented a set of resolutions demanding the closing of theatres it developed that a considerable number of the delegation disapproved the tenor of the resolutions and suggested that it would be a good idea if the parsons who were so anxious to close the picture shows would first pursuade their parishioners to refrain from patronizing them. Might be a good idea for preachers generally to take a vote of their congregations on the picture show.

NEW SPIRIT OF DRAMA

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

NOW that the war has been won and our people are settling down once more to ordinary life." says Milton Hoffman of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, "their souls freed from the weight constantly present while vast armies were contending in Europe, when they can once more take up the threads of life that were temporarily dropped, they will wish not only to be entertained but made to think seriously."

Here, at last, is a studio manager who realizes that we CAN think.

We are the people—you and I help make up the public.

When all studio managers learn that we shall then have better plays.

The whole trend of modern art of the screen makes for a spirit of truth about the present, and it requires thought to formulate stories dealing with our sane readjustment to the new spirit of the times and our progressively enlarging freedom. The violent reaction that is just now going on against long-suffered social injustice offers more intense and more important material for drama than the old-time stories of persecution in Siberia. Bolshevism furnishes more harrowing atrocities and more ideal villains than czarism ever knew, a far greater menace to world happiness.

A great gulf separates stories of four years ago and those of today.

Hatred, jealousy, cruelty and greed are still with us.

So are love, compassion, sacrifice and nobility of character.

These human expressions are the same, and drama must deal with what is human, but there is a great difference in what gives rise to passion and affection, as wide a difference as between modern weapons and those of ancient times.

Modern spirit is opposed to the morbid, to occult, the incredible.

We are sane enough to live while we live when we live.

When we live is far from being before the great war.

In dealing with that war there is much to be thought of.

As far as it is possible to do so with due regard for dramatic situations it furnishes in rich abundance those atrocities which are harrowing to wives and mothers of soldiers should be avoided, that is to say the actual view of them. This need not deprive us of the almost limitless resource of love stories and those of romantic adventure, which returning soldiers will enjoy seeing quite as well as ourselves, nor of the character contrasts offered by contact of American youth with that of European countries, probably the most fascinating the screen will exhibit.

Incidentally, let us have done with the conventional Frenchman.

Let us eliminate "ze" for "the" in sub-titles.

Dialect on the screen is an offense to good taste.

Differences between ourselves and Europeans, interesting to millions of soldier boys and their wives, mothers, sweethearts and sisters, are not in language so much as in character, for conversation must be presented intelligibly except in farce. Those individual peculiarities must be studied thoughtfully to be effective, so Milton Hoffman is right—it will require brains to "challenge the audience to mental activity and bright reasoning."

During years of European travel I never saw such foreigners as are presented on the stage, the hackneyed theatrical conceptions of ignorance.

Let us keep along lines of truth on the screen.

Just so with our own social and political life.

Otherwise screen drama will lose its hold on popular favor.

Drama must stand for the reality of its time.

There is a tremendous field opening up at home that will give growth through woman's new footing in business and social affairs, in her superior physical development, on which that of the race depends, in her attempt to keep the pace in our general advancement. We are frauds and moral cowards still to depict her as the woman of yesterday—she is a new creature.

It is our place as men to bring her up to our ideals.

Let us also consign the strutting hero to farce.

Remember also that emotions are more thrilling than action.

Passion cannot be deep and vital unless it is shown.

Drama will be only for the unthinking unless there is thought back of it—it is the brains in a screen product which elevates it above the commonplace, the dull, the weak, the undesirable, the unenjoyable.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THEME

By Robert C. McElravy.

WITH the increasing skill of scenario writers and directors in constant evidence in the making of photoplays a new danger arises. Is the story to be told worth telling? Will the hand of the stylist and dilettante become visible on the screen in the same manner that it has been visible in the pages of American fiction for this long time? Is the screen to be inflicted with a series of dainty and well made creations, which attract the eye but disappoint heart and mind?

While it is the inevitable tendency of any art to grow away from the people as it increases in outward deficiency, we do not think it will do so permanently with the moving picture. Stories with thin, unreal or artificial plots will not succeed upon the screen, because they will not draw and hold the people; they have not the qualities for stirring the soul that has made the screen successful.

It is well for any producer before he undertakes the production of a given story to consider carefully whether it contains something of vital interest for the public. Any plot that hangs together will not do, particularly for long feature subjects. Mere cleverness and prettiness are not enough to repay the patron for his trip to the moving picture theatre. He has been accustomed to getting more, and he expects to continue getting it.

Few of "Best Sellers" Have Screen Value.

Books and magazines go into the home; they may be picked up at idle moments, and if their stories are weak the reader will perhaps feel no great offense. He has only to quit reading and take up something else. Certain of the "best seller" novels of recent years have sold on their merits as stories, but many of them rode into popularity on a high wave of advertising. While many of these latter were seeming successes, their appeal was really very limited, and several publishers have confessed that the expense of floating a best seller was often greater than its earnings. Certainly there can be small gain to the screen in reproducing any except the best of this type of fiction.

Magazine stories are another type of fiction calling for close examination. "One swallow does not make a summer," and one short story does not make a magazine. The magazine costs the reader but a nominal fee and he can have it delivered at his door by the postman regularly. Its appeal is general, and if he finds but one strong story in the entire publication he will perhaps have no quarrel with it. The magazine gets its chief return in many instances from its advertisements, and if it loses one subscriber for any reason there is usually another ready to take his place. The theory has often been advanced in former years that the success of certain magazines, as advertising mediums, has been enhanced, rather than weakened, by running light, uncritical fiction.

With the screen the shoe of commercialism is on the other foot. Every feature production must sell itself by the sheer strength of its story interest! It has no advertising pages to help out on expenses. It does not go to the patron, but invites the patron to come to it. For these reasons the moving picture of the more serious type must be kept a strong and vital interpretation of real life, as it has been from the beginning. It must tackle problems of all sorts and stir the pulses of observers, or there is bound to be disappointment.

Authors who hope to place stories with the screen should take a long, second look at the requirements. The screen demands the stuff of real life for its features and the plot of the average magazine story has been in past years rather shy on this. When experienced critics sometimes report only four or five exceptional short stories in all of the magazines put together in a given month, it can be seen why discerning makers of moving pictures look twice before reproducing certain magazine fiction.

The plot of the average short story is not worth six reels, or even five, and many feature pictures have proved weak, not because they lacked good workmanship, but because the theme was not strong enough to start with. Many short stories have abundant plot for two or three reels, but not for longer subjects. Producers would undoubtedly get better results by giving such stories the footage they are worth than by stringing them out into attenuated feature productions.

Even a highly successful short story may represent a mere fragment of life, when reduced to action. It succeeds in its original form because the skilled hand of the writer who knows his business has made it acceptable. When the screen has developed a greater proficiency for expressing feeling and emotion without conspicuous action, it will be able to use such stories, but they will still be mere episodes and not worth more than one to three reels.

A gleam of hope is held out in the changing requirements of the magazines themselves, which are broadening and deepening as a result of the war. Douglas Z. Doty, one of the leading editors, writing in the Authors' League Bulletin for November, sounds a promising note when he says: "I believe that even in the cheapest of popular magazines the fiction-mechanic will have to give way to the writer with vision and ideals."

It may be that one result of the great conflict will be a general rejuvenation of the art of story telling, in which the author writes of life as he sees it, and the editor listens to the author. In such stories, under these new conditions, authors, magazines and the screen will find mutual profit.

OPPOSE COMPETITION OF GOVERNMENT

At Instance of National Association Committee Atlantic City Congress Adopts Resolutions

PURSUANT to a motion adopted by the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry a delegation appointed by President W. A. Brady, consisting of Walter W. Irwin, John C. Flinn, Will C. Smith and Frederick H. Elliott, attended the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress held under the auspices of the United States Chamber of Commerce at Atlantic City on December 5, 6 and 7. Classified as related group No. 37 the committee was organized with Mr. Irwin as chairman. Mr. Flinn as secretary and Mr. Smith as speaker, reporting through Major Group No. 10.

The congress was attended by more than 5,000 delegates representing every industry in the United States and the sessions were addressed by many men of national renown.

As the contribution of the motion picture industry the delegation from the N. A. M. P. I. offered a lengthy set of resolutions dealing with the question of Government ownership as it affects the motion picture and the question of censorship.

Charges Government Is In Competition.

Bearing on the first subject the resolutions recited the work done by the united motion picture interests in the aid of war work and noted that notwithstanding those activities, which were gratuitous in their nature, the Government did, through the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, enter into and now is engaged in commercial competition with the motion picture industry, by renting to motion picture theatres, at high prices, a news reel, containing pictures of war scenes on the various battle fronts, and designated as "Official Government Pictures," as well as long films known as feature pictures, thus depriving the news reels and the feature pictures of the industry of revenue, to the extent of the revenue diverted to the Committee on Public Information, which revenues to such committee was and is promoted by advertisements in the various trade papers, advising the exhibitors, in effect, that it was their duty as patriotic citizens to exhibit these "Official Films," and likewise advising the exhibitors that those who did so would receive a certificate signed by the chairman of the Committee on Public Information, acknowledging the exhibitor's patriotism and aid to the Government, and that such certificate was appropriate for framing and displaying in the lobby of his theatre to his neighbors and patrons."

On this subject the committee offered this concluding resolution:

"That it is the sense of this body that the National Government should forthwith discontinue its commercial competition with the motion picture industry, by the rental of film for profit, particularly as the industry has fully demonstrated its readiness, willingness and eagerness, without compensation, to distribute for the Government, much more effectively than the Government can do, any information which the Government deems advisable to disseminate, and likewise for the reason that the distribution of such material by the Government can only be for the purpose of getting the largest number of people to think upon the same subject at the same time, and the distribution of such information on a rental basis greatly restricts the extent to which such propaganda is conveyed."

Records Opposition to Censorship.

On the question of censorship, after reciting the various and well-known arguments against the official inquisition such as motion pictures have been subjected to in states where censorship is practiced, this resolution was offered:

"That the doctrine of censorship is un-American, and is contrary and dangerous to the fundamental principles upon which our Government was founded, and to the conduct of our political institutions for the benefit of the people, and, therefore, should be stamped out wherever it makes its appearance; the motion picture being left to a full and complete responsibility for its acts under the police powers of each community.'

These resolutions were submitted to Major Group No. 10 and, after due explanation, adopted.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and MARGARET I. MACDONALD

Censorship Folly, Says Myra K. Miller, Would Awaken Public Responsibility

AT our request Myra Kingman Miller, president of the National Federation of College Women, and chairman of the Better Film Committee of the National Council of Women, has submitted the following article embodying her views on the question of film censorship. This subject is one on which public opinion has been divided; and as is usually the case with a topic of vital importance, the majority is divided between those of broad and those of narrow vision—between those who seek constructive methods and those who do not.

The motion picture is the greatest factor in the education of the masses today. It reaches further than printing—it is the universal language. The most ignorant and the most cultivated alike read the story as presented in a motion picture.

Photoplay, an ethical magazine, in reference to the industry, has well expressed it as the Fifth Estate. Printing was the Fourth Estate, and history shows us what a blessing it proved to humanity. How much greater is the living vital story the screen presents to the public.

As with every new invention it was commercialized necessarily, and not always by individuals of the right motives, or any motives, except the grasping of the dollar, and so it has come to pass that many films of objectionable character have been made and distributed, which has aroused the just indignation of the right-minded people.

Man's instinctive resort in all public matters is—the law. No law could touch this. The next resort was some sort of board who should decide what might be shown, and hence—censor boards.

Any intelligent person knowing nothing of surgery would scorn the idea of pruning off each tiny end of the ramifications of a cancer with the hope of curing the curse. They would say immediately, "go to the root of the evil," but, better still, if it had nothing to feed upon it would die.

And so censor boards here and there clip off an evil spot, thinking to cure the evil, but it goes on.

There is but one sane remedy for the undesirable film, and that is lack of patronage. When the public becomes educated, to demand good pictures, and shows it by their patronage, one may be sure that kind, and that alone, will be presented and produced. The whole producing end of the industry is regulated by the box-office receipts in the local theatres, so it is the public that must be educated.

No clipping out of a few feet of film can make a desirable picture out of an undesirable one; the whole film is impregnated with the spirit of the story. Better leave it in and disgust the intelligent people, who will then awake to their civic responsibility. It rests with the individual who has a civic consciousness, nor will they shirk this duty on a paid board of censors, which, in the majority of cases, reverts into a purely political "job."

As illustration of the inefficiency of this method, the Better Film Committees of the National Council of Women have had more complaints of undesirable films being shown in Pennsylvania than from any other state, and this state has the most strict state censorship extant.

Censorship boards have not solved the problem, and it must remain in the province of the citizenship of each community to so raise the standard of their motion picture public's demand that no undesirable films can be profitably shown. This is the keynote to the situation.

We have no censorship board of printed material; no one for a moment would suggest that we forbid the Bible being read in our community because there are so many passages therein that are unfit for children to read, nor would we have a censor go through it and eliminate these passages. Yet, the great majority of people believe that the Bible is the greatest moral influence in the world today.

Parents do not forbid the reading of Shakespeare by their children. They simply do not give them Shakespeare to read until they are ready for it. They give them clean, wholesome, modern stories, until they are prepared to draw the right lessons from these great books. Parents, teachers and relatives carefully guard their children as to their reading, and yet they send them off to the "movie" with no thought as to what they are going to see. Then the cry goes up, "something must be done, our children must not see these terrible pictures."

Whose fault is it? Certainly not the producer's, when he is encouraged by the money received; nor the exhibitor's, who gives apparently what is wanted. Whose fault is it?

What is true of child life and the movies is true of adult life. People have taken the motion picture too lightly. It should be considered seriously. It is the great art. Every intelligent up-to-date adult should know something about the current pictures, should take an ethical magazine, should know what he wants to see, and what he wants his children to see, and should see these, all of them, and only these—then and not till then will the motion picture fill its proper destiny in the upbuilding of the nation, and then will the folly of the censorship plan be apparent to all.

Microscopic Pictures May Aid Industrial Science

THE assertion was made recently in the New York Evening Sun that the application of motion picture photography to microscopic images opened for it a new field. We would remind the Sun reporter that this field had been entered upon by the moving picture camera several years ago; but we do believe that it has never been applied microscopically in a manner so significant of practical results as the instance to which the Sun points in its issue of November 29 in the following quotation from the Scientific American:

A moving picture reproduction has been taken and vividly projected on the screen of the successive changes which take place in the structure of crystals of such iron (wrought iron) when subjected to alternate bends or blows. The piece of iron was placed in a bending machine. The microscope was attached just over the place or point where the iron was most affected, and a moving picture camera was attached to the microscope. As the piece of iron was bent back and forth, the effect in the breaking point was recorded through the microscope and in the camera. About 1-300th of a square inch of area of this iron was thus reproduced. The effect was remarkable, each minute change in the structure and crystals being accurately reproduced until the piece broke. The gradual progression or formation of the cracks or weakening lines was distinctly visible.

Credit for this really wonderful accomplishment is due to a professor in the University of Illinois. It is believed that the new idea will be successfully applied to steel, nonferrous or copper metals and other alloys in the near future. Besides explaining many interesting phenomena not now fully understood it may settle some controversies which otherwise would remain open much longer. It may determine just how steel as well as iron really deteriorates or weakens under stress, whether through the crystal or in some other way. Such an investigation might lead to a heat treatment prolonging the life of certain steels and making them less liable to fatigue, as it is called, or to gradual or sudden deterioration. The conclusion is evident that such an accomplishment might assist in prolonging the life of important members, cables and ropes for elevators, conserving life and material as well.

By its application it may ultimately be possible to tell, for example, by the appearance of the surface under the microscope whether a material has passed 30 per cent. of its effective life, or 90 per cent. thereof. If the characteristics are sufficiently pronounced, which experience alone can tell, then it will be possible to polish a section of a cable in use and examine it with a microscope from time to time and thus determine whether that section at least is nearly ready to fail or whether it shows no indication of failure. These observations would be based on previous moving pictures of the same material. The keynote of the idea is that failure takes place gradually, beginning the moment a piece of metal is first put into use and ending only when that piece gives way entirely.

The moving picture reproduction referred to was exhibited at a recent convention of testing engineers at Atlantic City.

Scotland in Wartime Shown in Newman Films

SOMETHING over a thousand feet of film giving a splendid idea of what has been happening in Scotland during the trying period of the late war has been brought here by E. M. Newman. These pictures, which will be exhibited at Carnegie Hall on December 15, accompanied by a travel talk by Mr. Newman, open in the streets of Edinborough and cover scenes of interest in this city, including a view of the city from the castle.

From here the photographer takes the spectator to Glasgow, where he becomes acquainted first with the streets and their inhabitants. It is in this city that we first thoroughly awaken to the wonderful work the Scottish women have accomplished during the war. A munitions factory into which Mr. Newman was accompanied by a government officer, revealed the nation's best types of womanhood busy in every department. More interesting still is an aeroplane manufactory in which aeroplanes are made entirely by women, even to the dynamos.

Among his collection Mr. Newman has also many scenes which serve to eulogize the women of England in the splendid way in which they have backed up the fighting forces of the Allies.

Belgian Pictures Score Success.

Some weeks ago we printed a review on "Belgium the Kingdom of Grief," a ten-reel collection of pictures recording the history of Belgium from the year 1830 to the present day, and owned by the Classic Film Distributing Company. This company is represented in New York by M. L. Fulton, 59 West 44th street.

Strictly historical, authentic and entertainingly assembled, this picture is making a record for itself as a drawing card which might be envied by feature productions of the dramatic class. At a recent showing at the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences at least 2,400 persons viewed it, and a return date was immediately negotiated for, which took place on Friday evening, November 29. It has the advantage of showing both sides of the lines, containing, as it does, glimpses of the German lines, which were procured supposedly while alien camermen were still able to snap stray shots of the German hordes.

Shrapnel in Barrage Fire.

The Paramount-Bray Pictograph 146 contains an illuminative illustration of the use of shrapnel in barrage fire. An animated drawing by F. Lyle Goldman of the Bray Studios serves to explain the different kinds of barrages. It shows how when the staff had determined where an attack was to take place, artillery was massed and by preliminary practice the range of the area to be covered was first determined. If the attack was only for the purpose of obtaining prisoners or to occupy a short distance of enemy trenches, the barrage was laid down on three sides of a square so that the enemy was prevented from attacking either in front or on the flanks of the advancing troops. The shrapnel and high explosives were rained down in continuous streams on these lines, making this area impassable. The "searching barrage" the "creeping barrage" and the "box barrage" have been carefully outlined and explained by the artist.

How Museum Groups Are Made.

A subject of unusual interest appearing in the 146th issue of the Paramount-Bray pictograph shows in detail how museum groups are made. The making of the frame over which fine wire is deftly placed to serve as a basis for the plaster cast is first shown. This cast when finished is taken from the form in sections which have been provided for while the plaster is still soft, and is then put together and covered with glue for the reception of the skin of the animal. When furnished with glass eyes and various other touches of realism these mounted groups would challenge detection from the real thing at a distance.

"Winning the War."

A splendid descriptive number, picturing many phases of the gigantic task of feeding our men overseas. The loading of a great steamer in 49 hours with beef and provisions is a fine feature, showing the enthusiasm which laboring men threw into their work in the great crisis. An army camp at mess time and scenes from the great Western farms are also included in this informing number, which was made by the Committee on Public Information .

"Liberty's Triumph."

A one-reel subject demonstrating in effective fashion some of the wonders that have been accomplished by America in the war. Innumerable scenes have been collected, giving a cumulative idea of our efforts since the conflict began. This includes many statistics, but they are intensely interesting and illustrated in a striking manner.

"Official War Review No. 24."

This issue contains one special feature which we believe has not been shown so fully before. That is the scenes depicting the manner of fighting with the deadly liquid fire. The great flame throwers are seen in full action, and an idea can be readily gathered of their terrible execution. Lloyd George, King George and other British dignitaries are pictured; also prisoners, wounded, Red Cross activities and tanks in action.

Universal Films Indian Progress.

The 97th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine shows a number of interesting scenes photographed with the Indians at the Carlyle Indian school. Here they are taught various trades and professions of the civilized world, as well as being otherwise educated, and it is with the greatest of skill that they ply those which they have mastered. In the picture we see them at work on the farms, in the dairy, in the blacksmith shop, and also at play; for the Indian is an acknowledged king of athletics.

General Promotes B. S. Riddle.

Announcement is made by General Film Company of the appointment of B. S. Riddle as assistant manager of the New York City exchange. Mr. Riddle was promoted to this position from traveling auditor, in which capacity he has served the company several years. At the New York exchange he will cooperate with Manager J. A. Hammell, his duties pertaining to the accounting work of the office. Mr. Riddle is known to motion picture men all over the East and has specialized in system and office management.

Beach Engages Kay Laurell

ANNOUNCEMENT by Goldwyn that Rex Beach has engaged Kay Laurell to play the leading feminine role in his newest motion picture, "The Brand," recalls the success in previous Rex Beach productions of a past and a present member of the Ziegfeld "Follies" organization, of which Miss Laurell was once a featured and favored player.

Kay Laurell.

When Rex Beach produced "The Auction Block" for Goldwyn release he chose for leading woman Ruby De Remer, a favorite of the "Follies," then comparatively unknown in pictures. She registered a success as a screen actress and since has been seen in a dozen productions. The debut of Will Rogers, Ziegfeld's famous cowboy monologist, was more recent.

Now Mr. Beach is further testing his ability to pick winners by engaging Miss Laurell, who never has been seen in motion pictures. In the "Follies" she was a favorite for several seasons. Her beauty and charm drew to her a remarkable following.

Miss Laurell has left for the Goldwyn studios in Los Angeles. Rex Beach will shortly go to the coast to supervise the production of "The Brand," which also will enlist the services of Russell Simpson, well remembered for his powerful impersonation of the trader in "The Barrier."

Fox Films for Peace Party.

While President Wilson's party is on the ocean bound for the Peace Conference at Versailles it will be entertained by Fox films. Among the photoplays which will be shown on board the George Washington will be two Victory pictures—"The Strange Woman," featuring Gladys Brockwell, and "Fame and Fortune," starring Tom Mix.

Major Campbell, of the historical division of the United States War College, erected a screen and projection booth in the main saloon of the ship, it having been proved repeatedly during the war that motion pictures are the best means for relieving tedium on shipboard. Major Campbell stated that the Fox corporation was the only company which gave its films without charge to the Presidential company.

Fighting the Fire.

A. C. RALEIGH, of the American, Butte, Montana, writes that during the "flu" scare he worked on the newspapers to do what he could to abate the hysteria. He could not hold down the death notices, which sometimes came close to the hundred mark, for that was paid advertising, but as a good advertiser, he kicked at the tendency to put a scare head on the plague story. He got them to cut out the trimmings and stick to hard facts. It was an excellent idea. The newspaper did not realize that it had a financial interest in the scare. The story seemed to have a news value if played up, and so it got the front page. Then Mr. Raleigh reminded them that the sooner the scare was abated the sooner they would get the theatrical, and, perhaps, some other, advertising back—and they took the hint. As a matter of fact, the scare was worse than the disease. New York was not shut down, largely because it seemed unfair to shut down the houses and permit the people to be herded like cattle in the transportation systems. The authorities took no special precautions other than the suggesting that the theatres open at eight, a quarter past and half-past, as instructed, to head off the rush at the usual eight-fifteen period, and in the same way, certain lines of business opened earlier or later than usual in an effort to distribute the load over a longer period. This was about the only precaution taken, and yet, in proportion to the population, New York came off rather light in spite of the congestion on the streets, in the transit systems, and even in the homes. And New York newspapers did not play up the plague as other towns did. In many sections the shutdown was continued beyond real necessity, because of hysteria, a part of which, at least, might have been avoided had the theatrical advertisers argued with the newspapers. Next time something happens, keep that in mind, and work on your local editors, not to the point of defeating safety, but to prevent hysterical action.

Steve Stunts.

Steve Farrar sends in a page from the local paper to explain his fondness for cross page spaces. He explains that when he takes a three column space, the Grand horns in on the rest of the top-of-page position, giving the same display to both.

six sevens and the Grand three, he gets the preferred position. Steve thinks, from his experience, that it pays to take the extra space and get off by himself, but the space rate is low, and he stands a better chance of breaking even on his displays. But Steve gets nice results with a pair of three nines shown here, which appeared in different issues. The Vitagraph cut comes out unusually well.

A Pair of Three Nines Which Gave an Excellent Display.

It is not always that Steve can get cuts. He was unable to get a single cut on "Carmen of the Klondike," in spite of the splurge he could make. It is unfair to the small town manager to hold up cuts in the exchange. Note the new slogan Steve is using. It seems to be new. The line runs, "The theatre that KNOWS and SHOWS what you want to see in Photoplays." Try it out.

McCormick Introduces.

Even the large houses which might be supposed to run on their own reputation find it desirable now and then to introduce a new star. S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, recently played Elsie Ferguson for the first time on his bills, and he took as much pains with her as though she were an unknown factor. One pair are respectively three and four sevens. These are given the same general treatment, but in one a linear border is used, with a double rule for the other, and in the latter the cut has been cropped to make room for the text. In the left-hand display, which is the Saturday space, the portion of the text under the star in the lower left-hand corner is an introduction of the star which runs into an announcement of other players to be seen at the house through the season. The same idea is carried out in two larger spaces, a three sixteens for the Saturday and a four fifteens for the opening day. Both are good examples of the McCormick style of plenty of type matter. Much of it is devoted to Miss Ferguson rather than to the play, yet it is made to seem to have a bearing upon the play. Even the Circle, with its large patronage, finds it profitable to identify new stars. Miss Ferguson is given a splendid send-off, to the probable betterment of business.

Look At the Layout.

This is part of an advertisemnt taken from a Rochester paper. Howard W. Shannon has foilowed S. Barret McCormick in the style of text, but he gets a new border with a very simple ornament.

Mr. Shannon took several inches—winding up with a small line cut. It would probably look even better with italic boldface. He ran the film for an entire week, and got away with it, which is pretty good dfor the town, or rather good for Mr. Shannon's ability to hustle.

Here you will find that the use of a light letter gives a fair display to the titles and stars. second cut. Here the use of a bold face does not give as good a result as with the light line used on the right. We think, too, that a better effect could be gained in all of these displays by using an upper and lower case instead of all capitals. The text is better written than displayed. There is some selling talk for the features, and with a better display this talk would get over more strongly. It is not a case of taking more space, but getting relative display in the space at command. Two eights is plenty in which to advertise a single bill, even with two features, but the printer must be coached to co-operate with the advertiser, and it is hard even to get printers these days, let alone getting good ones. It would be well, however, to try marking the lines to be set in upper and lower, and then insist that the instructions be carried out. Merely marking copy will not always bring the result these days.

Overloading.

The Thumb Tack is a little folder gotten out by the Los Angeles commercial artists. In a recent issue Frank F. Green contributes a brief article, in the course of which this appears:

> Many ads are actually camouflaged (no term expresses it more accurately) by overloading. Art requires a knowledge of how and what to eliminate—rather than what to include—in order that what is left will tell the story more quickly, more forcefully, and more convincingly. Particularly does this apply to newspaper advertising. If space for an ad message of 50 words is purchased and filled with 100 or more words, it is reduced to a mere background against which the ads of more practical managers stand forth and DRAW.

That says a lot. It is just as important to know what to put in as to know what to keep out, but often what is kept out counts for more than what is put in.

A Good Lobby Iden.

Here is an attractive easel from the California Theatre, San Francisco. It is good from two angles. In the first place it matches the trim of the lobby and fits better into the scheme of things than would a dissimilar frame. In the second angle it gives all a person needs to know about the performance. This is particularly important in the case of a continuous performance house, but it is good even for straight performance houses. With the addition of a clock set into the panel it would be even more complete.

Before and After.

To announce the closing of the Mazda, Aurora, Neb., because of the influenza, a throwaway 6 by 8 inches was gotten out. It was headed "The Dark Secret Exposed," the last word being much smaller than the first three. After reciting the mayor's proclamation, it ran on:

> As a member of the City Council, the manager of the Mazda was for the order, and for it hard—everybody should be glad to co-operate with the City Officials and Board of Heaith in their efforts to check the spread of the "flu."
> When the disease, like the Huns will be, has been licked to a frazzle, the Mazda will be back with its usual pep until the war is over, then well laid plans will materialize and bigger things will be doing.
> Heave to! Lend a hand in lickin' the kaiser!—BUY MORE BONDS!

For the reopening a slightly smaller sheet was used starting, "Hey, Skinny, the Mazda's gonna open ag'in and I'm sure a-goin'." This was in display with the rest of the text reading:

> COM ON AN' GO, ONLY COSTS SIX CENTS FER US KIDS AN' SEVENTEEN FER THE BIG KIDS AN' MOTHER AN' DAD—SIS CAN GIT FAT TO TAKE HER!
> 'Bout the "flu" business, needn't be scared 'bout catchin' up with that stuff at the Mazda, y'know that fumigatin' stuff what kills microbes an' germans an' other small animals, well a lot a that has been used down there when them said animals didn't have their gas masks on an' every one's gone west. There aint much "flu" around any more anyhow. All y'gotta do is be careful 'bout gettin' in water over yer hed an' snezin' in a feller's face when he's tellin y'somethin'.

Jails an' schools an' things gonna open Monday—

COM ON AN' GO TO THE MAZDA!

This was informal and took the curse off the closing and gave a good start to the opening. We have seen no instance of public recentment against the order, and we are glad that most places took it nicely. It does not help any, and it certainly does hurt to attempt to question the propriety of an order designed to protect the public health.

Here's Another.

Nils Malmlof, an operator of West Fort Lee, N. J., very kindly sends in another Swedish advertisement to match the Douglas Fairbanks Bennie Ziedman recently sent in. The likeness is just as striking and is along the same lines, but was used by another house. Possibly these are supplied by the rental company, but no matter what, these two advertisements give a hint to American advertisers. Here is a style of cut which cannot clog up, even on a hand press, that is characteristic, striking and selling. Now, if we had one of Miss Pickford——.

A Chaplin advertisement from a Swedish paper, matching the Fairbanks portrait in the issue for November 2.

A Cyclorama Lobby.

Here is something unusual. It is the lobby of the Strand, Seattle, Wash. It will be noticed that a cyclorama has been painted for "Italy's Flaming Front" which covers not only the lobby space, but laps over on the corners. Only the box office is left uncovered, the painting being tacked to the doors, which are cut through. The picture played for an entire week at the house. Of course it was backed by good advertising displays. The lobby was the idea of Gordon F. Fullerton, who quit the business to go into the foreign trade. We bet he busts that game wide open once he gets started.

Persistence.

A. C. Raleigh, of the American, Butte, Mont., takes up a good angle when he writes that he works on the persistence of suggestion. He says:

> I enclose a couple of "last day" ads, being rather typical of my last-day stuff. I find that they bring good results. As a rule, I try to use the same cuts each day, only smaller than the one used the day before, on the supposition that if people miss seeing it the first day, they at least get a mental impression, and on the next day—or maybe the thrid day, they really look at it and I get my message over. It is something like having a "nail in your shoe"—you may not notice it particularly when it first appears, but from subconscious "appeal" it will finally fix your mind fully on that one nail.
> My fourth-day stuff, as per enclosed samples, however, I have been changing—to "hit 'em" somewhere else rather unexpectedly, and as I said, with good results.

The fourth day has been eliminated from the schedule by a return to three changes a week, for it has been found that three days is about the limit for the town, but the suggestion still holds good. The fourth-day change is a type talk. The sample shown is a square of 4¾ inches set into a three sixes, which leaves

"GOIN'-TO PETE"

ONCE there was a Guy so Busy doing Noth-ing that he Never got Any-thing done but he was Always "Goin' to." He would let his poor old Dad live on Loose Stuff for a Week because Pete was Always "Goin' to" take the old Boy's husted False Teeth over to the Tooth Carpenter and have 'em Riveted up—and Never did. Ever since your Uncle Samuel Horned into the Big Con-tro-versy, Pete has been "Goin' to" Buy a Liberty Bond, but Pete's Cal-cu-la-tions Always get on the Greased Skids.

Pete has been "Goin' to" see Norma Tal-madge in the "Safe-ty Cur-tain" and a Rattling Swift Session with "Hands Up" at the American Theater for the Past two Days and you can Bet your B.V.D.'s Against a Scuttle of Coal that Pete won't see 'em either for To-day is the Last Day—and Tomorrow Pete will say, "Well, I was 'Goin' to,' anyway."

Are You one of These "Goin' to" Guys?

A last day display by A. C. Raleigh in which type talk replaces the cut displays of the first three days.

plenty of white margin. It will be noticed that the first paragraph has nothing to do with the theatre. It is just a talk about Pete and Liberty Bonds, and as the reader goes along he begins to wonder what it is all about. Then, when his attention is riveted, the mine is sprung and he is told about the show. It is all good advertising psychology.

How About the Kiddies?

We have heard very little about children's matinees this season. What has happened to them? They have always paid when they were properly run, and they are as good today as they ever were. Dig up the idea and run it again. Give a special performance. Rebook the stories that will please the children most, and add some special features. Set up a blackboard and have a brief drawing contest each week. Most children like to draw, and you can make this a feature for a time. Advertise a spelling bee and give tickets to the winner—tickets good for the show the following week. Have a brief singing session. Get a little local talent. There are a lot of schemes for getting the children in and holding their interest. Get after them. It all helps. And you can let the kiddies take home the program for next week, after telling them in a little speech all you can about the coming shows. They'll tell their elders and be your press agents. Use them.

Referred to Daniel.

Steve Farrar, in one of his recent displays, says:

> And when we say "It's a special," we speak Webster's language. Look up the word in Webster's New International Dictionary.

About half the people will, and the other half will be too lazy to do so, but will be just as much impressed. It works either way. Try it some time.

Results Count.

Good advertising may not always be pretty to look at, but it drags the people in. That is what counts.

Be Individual.

No two men advertise alike. If they did, there would be little pull in advertising. But the man who does the best work is usually he who makes the most radical departure from the average.

Be Distinctive.

Be distinctive, even in little things. All it costs is care. If you have bill boards, given them a frame that can be recognized. Stripe them in green and yellow, or purple and green, or any vivid contrasting colors. They may not be able to read the paper as far as they can see the boards, but each time they see your color combination they will think of you. Work the color scheme into your house front. Make it as much a part of your trademark as the house design or your slogan. Just keeping yourself in mind will make business for you. Have a slogan, a design and house colors and you have three points of contact instead of one.

Tell Your People.

If you have a comedy with a title that sounds like a drama or a drama with a comedy title, be particularly careful to announce that it is a comedy, or the reverse. Don't let a patron come into your house expecting one thing and give him something else.

Keep It Going.

Don't let your "Yellow Dog" club die out just now. We shall need it more than ever in the next twelve months. Keep it going.

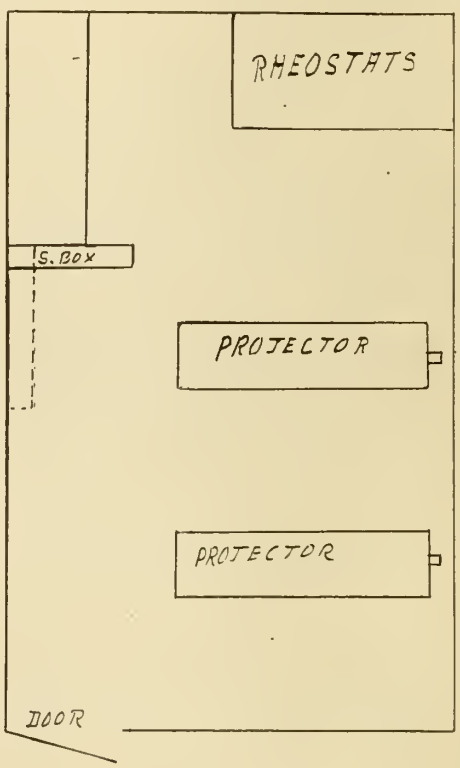
Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Cleveland, Ohio.

While in Cleveland, I took occasion to visit a few of the many theatres, photoplay palaces and dumps contained in the "Sixth City of the United States." Oh, yes, Cleveland, like New York, has all three classes. It has a few beautiful palaces of the silent drama, many very good theatres, and some of which the least said perhaps the better.

My first gum-shoe expedition was aimed at The Strand, at a time when Projectionist Carl J. Schweikert was on duty. The speed of projection, while not controlled, was fairly correct. The light was brilliant and the screen apparently evenly illuminated, but Brother Schweikert was, not only once, but three or four times careless in the handling of his light, so that bad discoloration occurred. The theatre itself was well lighted, except that the side-light shades would be very distinctly improved if their color were green, blue or old rose; also the picture would, in my judgment, gain in several respects if its width were to some extent reduced. The black border does not come out to meet the picture, as it should. The organ light was completely hidden from the audience by an opaque drape, which is indeed excellent. The Strand is a charmingly decorated theatre, and, aside from the above criticisms, everything therein is O K from the projection viewpoint. I am sorry to be obliged to criticise Brother Schweikert's handling of the light, but Friend Schweikert, together with other Cleveland projectionists, is now receiving 75 cents, and will, after January 1, receive 80 cents per hour. This is getting up into the "real money" class, and Cleveland projectionists have absolutely no right to give anything in the way of carelessness in return. Good pay calls for consistently high-class work, not in some, but in all respects, and not sometimes, but all the time. Seventy-five cents and 80 cents per hour and discolorations of light on the screen most emphatically do NOT go together, unless it can be shown that failure of the management to provide suitable apparatus or necessary supplies to keep the apparatus in good repair is responsible, which was not the case in this instance. I also met W. E. Reed, the other projectionist. The Strand projectionts are using two arc controllers constructed by themselves, which seem to give fairly good results. The construction is simple, and decidedly clever. It consists of a small motor attached, by suitable mechanism, to the lamp carbon feed wheel. The motor circuit is controlled by means of a switch, which in its turn is handled by a plunger actuated by a magnet. When the voltage of the arc increases slightly, the plunger lifts, completing the motor circuit and starting the motor. As soon as the arc length is reduced, thus lowering the arc voltage, the plunger drops, breaking the motor circuit and stopping the motor. The regulation is not as close as that of some other controllers, but is nevertheless very good. I can see no reason why the action could not be refined to give practically perfect results.



In the evening a party of us went out to view the new Stork Theatre, over on the West Side at Eighty-fifth and Loraine. H. Reif is manager of The Stork, and you may take it from me Friend Reif has something to be proud of. The Stork is a beautiful house, seating 916 on one floor. The walls are in imitation of gray cut stone. The ceiling is lofty and on the side walls are fourteen art panels, seven on either side. Admissions are 11 and 17 cents. The projection room is one which could hardly be improved upon, in so far as its construction be concerned, with the single exception that the observation ports are smaller than they should be. I have always been unable to understand why, in an otherwise perfect room, you will so often find observation ports of too small dimensions. The room has a lofty ceiling, and measures 15 feet square—perhaps more. The equipment consists of two Power's 6-B and two Hallberg 20 Century motor generators. The screen is a Gardiner Velvet Gold Fibre. Frederick Albinger is in charge of projection. He is one of Cleveland's best men—well posted, progressive and not satisfied to remain in ignorance, or a state of half-way knowledge on any point connected with his profession. My compliments to The Stork. It is a credit to the industry—also in all my travels I have nowhere witnessed better screen results than that I saw in The Stork that evening.

At the Cameraphone I dropped in, said "hello, howdy do and good-bye" to John Shafranek, projectionist. An old-time friend and a good man is John, he has one grave fault, viz: he changes jobs too often. He has only been in the Cameraphone six years—or is it seven? Wanted to see Manager McGowan, also an old-time friend. The editor ran the projectors in William Swanson's theatre, Thirty-ninth street and Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago, when he was manager of that house some nine or ten years ago. McGowan was, however, absent from roll call, and we didn't connect.

At the Miles, excellent auditorium lighting, picture size and screen setting were in evidence; also the picture light was brilliant and well handled and the speed was approximately correct, but the projection room is very, very bad, indeed. In the first place, it is away up at the top of a high gallery, with a projection angle of about 30 degrees. I would respectfully call the attention of the Miles manager to the fact that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has condemned any projection angle greater than 12 degrees. By his projection room location he is stretching out the shadow forms of the artists who appear upon his screen, causing them to be taller than they really are, without any corresponding increase in breadth of parts of their anatomy at top of screen, but with full increase for such parts as may be at the bottom thereof. The practical effect is to cause artists to appear abnormally tall and thin when they come down stage. Rather an outrageous thing to do to Mary Pickford, William Hart et al, is it not? As for the projection room itself, it and the conditions therein on the day of my visit are without excuse. The projectionist in charge at the time of my visit, C. M. Canfield, a good man, by the way, is leaving. "I can't and won't stand this any longer," said he. Here is what I found. Consider it well. The room itself is, when size and importance of theatre is considered, absurdly small; also things have been done, as regards the installation, without apparently the slightest regard of the convenience or comfort of the men who work therein. For instance: a new switch box, or was it a fuse box, has been installed in an angle of the wall just at the rear of one of the projectors. This could just as well, by a little additional work, have been placed flat against the main wall, entirely out of the way, and at the same time just as accessible. Instead, it has been placed as per drawing, in which we are presumed to be above, looking down. There is barely room for the projectionist to pass between the switch box edge and machine. Dotted lines show where switch box should be. The thing serves as a continual aggravation, annoyance and inconvenience for the men. It is utterly without legitimate excuse. But this is a mere beginning. At the rear of the room are large rheostats, delivering, so Projectionist Canfield said, close to 90 amperes D.C. from 110-volt lines. There is a fair-size vent flue and an exhaust fan, but notwithstanding the smallness of the room, its comparatively low ceiling, its location at the top of the gallery, the very warmest part of the house, and those heat-producing rheostats, the exhaust fan not only was not running, but was, according to Canfield's statement, entirely disconnected; also the vent flue damper was closed tight. Sampling the heat, I looked about at once for the vent flue, and said: "For Heaven's sake man, open that damper! You'll roast alive!" "Against orders," said he. "W-what?" I rather stammered, in amazement. "Yep," was his reply, "boss issued order this morning to keep the vent flue damper closed. Said too many condensers broke." Nor was this the sum of the grave faults existing, for the observation ports are mere exaggerated knotholes, something like five or six inches square. When I arrived, and while I was present the room door, which opens directly into the auditorium, stood open. It had to be if the projectionist was to remain inside the room at all. With those rheostats inside, and vent flue closed, no man could have remained inside that room with the door closed for any length of time. "I am quitting," said Canfield. "I've had enough. I won't work under such conditions." And who can blame him?

But what is local union 160 doing that it permits its members to work under such highly dangerous conditions? What is going to happen if a fire occurs in that room, with vent fan disconnected, vent flue damper closed and projection room door open? And what is going to happend to the health of men who work under such impossible conditions? I am asking these question of Local 160 and of the management of the Miles, under the presumption that the Cleveland authorities must be either dead or sleeping. If the Miles management can show that I have in any way misstated or exaggerated anything I will most cheerfully make every possible apology. However, I venture the assertion I can prove every statement, and prove it amply. It is most unpleasant to thus caustically criticise a theatre, but we owe a duty to the projectionist, to the public, to the motion picture industry and the erring theatre itself, and that duty compels the criticism.

Dinner and Lecture.

While in Cleveland I was informed that a portion of the projectionists of the city would like to hear an address on projection. A dinner was arranged at the Olmstead Hotel at 11 p. m. Friday, November 22, at which were present the bulk of the progressive element of the projectionists of the city, as well as Will C. Smith, general manager of Nicholas Power Company, who made a trip from Columbus to be present. W. C. Kunzman and one other representative of the National Carbon Company, whose name I unfortunately cannot at the moment recall; also Mr. Olliver, of the Olliver Supply Company. The dinner was nice and the gathering congenial. Friend Kunzman acted as toastmaster, calling upon General Manager Smith, one or two others and the Editor, all of whom were well received. We spoke for two hours on topics allied to projection, and found the men to be alive to the importance of progressing in their profession.

During my stay in the city I had the pleasure of partaking of the hospitality of Projectionist Howard Codding at lunch. A charming family and home, has friend Codding; also friend wife is past master of the Art of the Kitchen Range.

Mansfield, Ohio.

Learning that we intended visiting Cleveland, Local Union 576, Mansfield, Ohio, wrote, asking if we would not extend the trip to include Mansfield, and address the theatre folks of that city upon our favorite subject. And so it came about that we clambered off the train in Mansfield, met Brother De Lancy, Secretary of the local union, and another brother, whose name I did not, unfortunately, make note of, were conducted to an hospice and made comfortably for the period of our stay. The fact that Local 576 grasped this opportunity to accumulate unto themselves an address on projection speaks well for them and gives promise for their future. They did not know that my presence among them would be of benefit, but surely it could do no harm, therefore nothing could be lost and something might be gained, they reasoned. Ask them now whether or no they acted wisely; also ask the managers of that city, all of whom were present, except one.

Mansfield is a charming little city of 30,000 folks. It boasts seven theatres, all of which do good business in normal times. But times are far from normal just now, for on top of war worries came the "flue," or is it "flew," "flu," fleu" or "flu" scare, followed by what some think an utterly senseless closing order, which darkened the theatres for six long weeks, though the saloons ran wide open, "playing" to crowded houses. Of course, it is quite vastly more dangerous to sit in a theatre than to crowd up against a bar where in course of an hour a dozen different men may drink out of the same glass, with only a perfunctory rensing of the same between drinks. Of course it is—NOT. Verily the ways of public officials are past understanding. Um, har-r-r-rumph, well, anyhow the theatres closed and the saloons remained very widely wide open, nor have the theatres yet gotten back to normal business. For this reason the boys felt just a bit blue.

Most of Mansfield theatres are of the rapidly vanishing "storeroom" type, though there are notable exceptions and the storerooms are, as a whole, above the average of that type in their appointments. I visited the Grand, where Projectionist H. Bottomly was producing as good screen results as friend manager has any right to expect with six-year-old American Standard projectors. H. L. Straul is projectionist at the Park. Screen results good. For a storeroom theatre the Park projection room is very good; also its equipment is excellent. There is a steel clothes locker for the projectionist, a neat chest for his tools, etc., and everything as orderly and neat as the proverbial new pin. The Royal started its picture out of frame; also the projector stopped three times in less than two minutes, though I was later informed there was trouble with the motor generator set. But the motor generator cannot be responsible for starting a picture out of frame. Very crude, gentlemen, very crude. Also the Royal auditorium lighting is in urgent need of attention. Both the bright side lights and clock are bad. But I might add that in every theatre I viewed, except the Majestic, the auditorium lighting needs attention. The White Way is a pretty little house, showing a sharp, brilliant picture. The projection room is, I was told, very badly crowded, though that cannot be remedied. The Opera House runs vaudeville and pictures. Its projection room is well located, but absurdly small—about seven feet wide by six feet. Its manager, Mr. Partello, agreed to be present at the meeting, later, but was not.

The Majestic is Mansfield's motion picture theatre de luxe. It is a really well-planned, commodious house, seating 970, practicaly on one floor. The Majestic auditorium lighting could hardly be improved upon, from the practical projection viewpoint. There is ample light to enable the patrons to find seats, yet no point of light is visible to the eye of the audience, nor is any light, except that at the organ, anywhere near the screen. And the organ is at the left of the screen and diagonal to it. Its subdued light is almost invisible to the audience. W. A. Partello manages the Majestic. I find nothing but commendation for his auditorium lighting but must, perforce, if I am to be honest, severely criticise his projection room. For a house as pretentious as the Majestic the room is too small, especially front to back. This makes it inconvenient and uncomfortable for the projectionist. But there is a more serious fault, viz: too small and very badly located observation ports. This latter could be remedied at slight expense and trouble. It should by all means be done. Make the ports full 12 inches wide, and so locate them that the projectionist will have a full view of his screen at all times, sitting or standing, without either standing on tip toes or getting down on his knees. I would strongly recommend that Manager Partello install the adjustable port illustrated on page 220 of the Handbook. Remember, friend Partello, that unless you give the projectionist a full, free view of the screen, from normal projection position, you have no right to expect the best screen results, and you most likely won't get them, either.

One of Mansfield's projection rooms has a very bad, not to say dangerous, entrance. One mounts a narrow iron ladder in the box office, the cashier having first vacated, transforms one's self into an acrobatic angle worm, wriggles through a narrow opening in the ceiling, and, unless one sticks fast, is presently in the projection room. Bad, gentlemen, very bad; also rather inexcusable. I would not care to be the one in that room should a really bad film fire occur therein.

At 11 p. m. every projectionist and manager, except Mr. Partello, gathered in the Labor Lyceum; also three or four theatre men (managers and projectionists) of Shelby, Ohio, twelve miles away, motored over and were present. For two hours or more we lectured them on the do's and don'ts of projection. After we had done we heard many expressions of satisfaction concerning time well spent. Good luck to you, Mansfield. Maybe some day your public officials will conclude you are as much entitled to remain open as a saloon, anyhow. You are good fellows and sports enough to take constructive criticism in good part. In future if we can help you in any way, let that fact be known.

Shelby, Ohio.

The men of Shelby exacted a promise that we would stop off in their town on our way back to Cleveland. We are well pleased that it was so, for we there examined a theatre which would do credit to a city many times the size of Shelby; also we met a progressive, high-class projectionist.

Shelby has only 5,000 population, yet she has two motion picture theatres with a combined seating capacity of 1,200. The Opera House auditorium is up one flight of stairs. It seats 650, is managed by Allwein and Shreffler, and has a fair projection room. Screen results, as shown the day I was there, were good. The screen sets at back of deep stage, the space from its edge to proscenium being filled with blank wall of dead back. This ought to be relieved by rows of artistically arranged artificial hedge of green, with about three pots of bloom on either side, or something of that sort. As it now it the thing looks too raw and crude when the lights are on.

A new man has just assumed the office of projectionist. I would suggest that his very first job be to accumulate a goodly supply of clean rags and proceed to dirty them on the projection equipment.

The other house, the Castambia, owned and managed by Castor and Stambaugh, was erected at a cost of $30,000. It has a neat red tapestry brick front, the rest of the construction being concrete. It is thoroughly fireproof; also it is as modern and pretty an auditorium as one will find in far larger cities. Seats 550, all on one floor. The projection room is readily accessible by means of an iron stairway and is commodious as to size, well ventilated and thoroughly fireproof. R. E. Horn is projectionist. Friend Horn is a student of his business. He has a fine kit of tools and knows how to use them. He has ordered from the Nicholas Power Company and has installed revolving shutter spindles 16 inches in length. He has his revolving shutters at the plane of the aereal image of the revolving shutter, 18 inches from the aperture, and says the benefit derived by the change has far more than justified its cost. Brother Horn has promised us photographs and description very soon, hence we will not say more now. My compliments to the Castambia management and to Projectionist Horn. It required courage to erect a theatre of that type in a town of 5,000, and I do hope that the venture succeeds. Certainly Messrs. Castor and Stambaugh have done their part in putting in the plant and securing the best projectionist available.

Peach of a Souvenier.

The Westinghouse Company presented each member of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers attending the Cleveland meeting with a most useful and really excellent souvenier in the form of a silver magazine lead pencil of high grade. There is no advertising thereon except a large "W" on the end of the pencil, under which is, in microscopic letters, the words "Westinghouse Electric," surely quite permissible when one considers the value of the article.

Next Meeting in Philadelphia.

Owing to abnormal right-after-the-war conditions there was no contest in evidence for the securing of the next meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. It was the editor who moved that Philadephia be made the goat, knowing the reputation of that city for open-handed hospitality, and that Lewis Schwab and the rest of the bunch down Ben Franklin way would welcome us to the City of Brotherly Scraps with open arms.

The next meeting already promises to be one of the best ever held, and the last one was anything else under heaven than slow. The papers submitted at the Cleveland meeting will prove to be of inestimable benefit to the industry. The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has already, in its brief span of life, more than proven its right to a place in the sun.

And in this connection, while the editor differs with C. Francis Jenkins in many things, and on many points, it must be freely conceded that the Society owes its existence to C. Francis Jenkins, who, on his own initiative, called the first meeting in New York City, and who has labored long, faithfully and well to perfect the organization of which he is the father and first President.

The society seems now to be on a firm footing. It can only be wrecked by the most gross mismanagement, and that will not, we are very certain, come to pass. There is a long life of usefulness before it. More power to it, and may it live to see accomplished all those high aims its sponsors see in the future.

Cleaning Tension Springs.

John R. Lavenburg, Linneus, Mo., complains:

"Have a great deal of trouble with a hard deposit gathering on my tension shoes. Scrape it off with my knife every evening after work, but it gathers again quickly and makes the picture jump."

The deposit is a combination of emulsion, film cement (probably mostly the latter, as you surely don't run very new films in such a small town) and dirt. It not only will make the "picture jump," but may do serious injury to the film itself. Never clean tension shoes with a knife blade or other tempered metal instrument. By so doing you are apt to roughen the polished surface of the shoe, and thus aggravate the trouble. A silver coin is an excellent implement to use, but an old toothbrush handle, broken off near the brush and sharpened to a cutting edge with a file is preferred by some. Applying water to the deposit will soften it very quickly and facilitate its removal.

Thinks It Foolish.

"I want to put in a word with regard to that proposed new title, "Projectionist." In my opinion it is a foolish and meaningless word; also it does not suggest the nature of the work it is supposed to stand for. Several times recently I have been asked by people what line of work I am engaged in. I quoted the glorious title "Projectionist," whereupon there was a lot of explaining to do. True, it is fine to have one word to describe our profession, but I don't believe Projectionist is the word. In my opinion the title Moving Picture Machine Operator should stand, or possibly Motion Picture Engineer, because they suggest the nature of the work. You seek to differentiate between "operator" and what you call projectionist. That don't go. In my opinion it is wrong. There is no question in my mind but that you mean right, Brother Richardson, as you have always meant right; also may the good work of our department go still further, under your leadership, but I think the title projectionist is a misfit and no good. I have talked to a great many managers and operators about this, and all have said about the same thing. Your argument with regard to there being many different kinds of operators is true, but is it not also true that the soldier projects bullets, the firemen projects water, etc.? Why, then, not call them projectionists? (The point is that we don't. There would be just one profession, or trade carrying the title, whereas we now have a dozen now carrying the title "operator." Ed.) I understand your intent in seeking to change the name. It is to create a higher class of men. (Um, well, that is one way to put it, and in a way correct. Give the man something to live up to, is the way I would put it. Ed.) But knowledge only will do that, not the change to a meaningless name."

Honest criticism, couched in civil terms, is always in order in this department, and I make no question as to Brother Schalk's honesty of intention, any more than he questions mine. But I do very seriously question his having a broad grasp of this proposition. Humanity is prone to follow established custom; also established lines of thought. It is an historic fact, of record, that when Columbus argued that the world was round, those who did not deride his views as foolish, declared him to be a lunatic. It is of record that a priest sought to dissuade Columbus from his "pernicious and well-nigh wicked views" and that he said almost exactly what you have said, friend Schalk, viz: "I have talked with many scholars, and men in high places, concerning your theories, and they one and all deride them as foolish."

So much for that. Suppose, Friend Schalk, you had said "I am an operator," instead of "I am a projectionist," would you not also have had to explain? Of course, it is to be expected that managers would deride, and operators object. A somewhat troublesome change is involved. Until the fraternity and the public learns to know the new term it will be necessary to explain. However, be it known to you that machine manufacturers approve the new term, many advanced projectionists have approved it, the president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers used it in his annual address to the members, some public officials (examining board officials, I mean) are using it, in correspondence at least, and I notice the Motion Picture News has, to its credit, used it in its department headlines and text matter. In all friendliness let me say, Friend Schalk, your contention that it is not descriptive and that it is meaningless is not well considered; also your position on that point is not well taken. In brief, my intention in this whole matter is to dignify the profession with a real name, and to give the men something to live up to. To give them a professional name they can, in time, came to be proud of. I do differentiate as between the operator and the projectionist. The former is the operator of a machine. That is precisely what the title means. The operator is concerned with the mechanics of projection. The projectionist is concerned with the mechanics of projection and with the artistic reproduction upon the screen of the finished results, which goes far, far beyond mere machine operation. Perhaps I do not put the idea I have very clearly, but I think most of you "get me." I shall welcome views of projectors of motion pictures on this subject.

Later: Brother Untermayer, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which body may be presumed not to do foolish, ill-considered things, has, by unanimous vote, adopted the name projectionist as the correct and official title for the man who projects motion pictures. Wadda y' gotta say now, huh!

Damaged Film and Reason Therefor.

The Monarch Film Service, Memphis, Tenn., hands us samples of damaged film, with request for opinion as to reasons therefor.

The damage consists of what might be described as a fading of the image or photograph. I submitted samples to Jack Cohen, editor Universal Animated Weekly, Screen Magazine and Current Events, who surely is an expert in the ills films fall heir to, having been intimately connected with their handling for many years. Here is his reply, which to me is conclusive: "Just looked over samples of film you asked me to make report upon. I find that this film has been wet with oil or some other fluid, which has caused the emulsion to soften. I find that probably in polishing or renovating the film the roll was put on backward and has removed a portion of the emulsion."

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Musical Alliance Calls for Your Support and Earnest Co-operation

THE annual meeting of the Musical Alliance of the United States was held at its offices, 501 Fifth avenue, New York, on Tuesday afternoon, November 19.

Before presenting the annual report, John C. Freund, the president, reminded the members that the Alliance was duly incorporated on October 29 of last year, under the laws of the State of New York, as a friendly organization—not for profit.

He recalled the events which led to the formation of the Alliance and showed that the idea of such an organization was the result of nearly half a century of experience in the musical world. It was more particularly the outcome of experiences that he had encountered in the last six years while traveling all over the country delivering addresses, calling attention to the progress the United States has made in musical knowledge and culture.

Some startling facts were brought to light in his masterly address. America spends for music in all its forms $600,000,000 per annum. Yet, in spite of this purchasing power, no central organization exists for musical people. American artists have always looked to Europe for their training and felt without the hall-mark of Germany their voices could command no respect at home. Mr. Freund has fought that idea for many years, both in his lectures and through the Musical America, of which he is editor. He has always contended that there are good vocal instructors in the United States and no real necessity has existed for foreign culture.

Thus, at no small personal expense, Mr. Freund launched the Musical Alliance, an organization for the betterment of musicians and musical conditions. It was founded to unite all interested in music and musical industries for certain specific aims.

Briefly, the Alliance demands full recognition of music and musicians as a vital factor in national, civic and home life. It desires that music be introduced into the public schools with proper credit for efficiency in study. It plans to advance the musical tastes of the people by assisting societies, clubs and associations, and by inducing municipalities to provide funds for free concerts. It stands back of the composer, singer, player, teacher and conductor and will oppose all attempts to discriminate against American music or musicians. Lastly, it favors a national conservatory of music and will urge that a department of Fine Arts be established in Washington. We feel that the fulfillment of all its lofty motives will lie in the establishment of a portfolio for music.

The Musical Alliance has a membership of 2,500 comprising all great singers, composers, conductors, and musical impresarios. It has not only enlisted the good will and support of the most prominent musicians and teachers, but also of the men who are at the head of the great musicians' organizations. It has members in over three hundred cities representing every phase of musical activity.

Even in so short a time, the influence of the Musical Alliance has been felt. In this connection, it should not be forgotten that whatever has been accomplished was done during the most trying time the musical world has known.

True to its chief aims, the Alliance has interested the Hon. Philander P. Claxton, Commissioner of Education in Washington. He attended a dinner given him by some members of the organization in New York, where he not only declared his sympathy with the work, but stated that he was engaged on a plan to improve and enlarge the scope of music in the public schools. The mere fact that Commissioner Claxton so favorably expressed himself regarding the value of public-school music has had a tremendous influence everywhere. It has strengthened the hands of those who in many places have been unable to secure any such recognition.

Through the activities of the Alliance, the press everywhere have given music more consideration than ever before.

The Alliance, furthermore, has been of considerable service to those engaged in getting up community choruses in various parts of the country. It has furnished plan and scope to those who are interested. Acknowledgment has been made for the great assistance which it has given to the section of the War Department engaged in providing singing leaders and music in the military camps.

The Musical Alliance has been instrumental in obtaining for the people of New York a larger appropriation for park concerts and that has been productive of good. Mayor Preston, of Baltimore, has appointed a director of municipal music, and that city of the south is rightfully proud of its musical prowess.

Another movement with which the Alliance has been identified and which is also gaining strength, is for the recognition of talent, not because it is American, German, or French, or bears a foreign hall-mark, but because of its merit. It likewise insists that in this country we shall have in our music what we put into our constitution, "that there shall be no prejudice on account of race, religion or previous condition of servitude."

The educational idea of the Alliance is not to develop the composer, but to create a condition of the public mind where people will be willing to accept a composer and not turn him down just because he happened to be called "American." The plea is not that anyone shall be recognized because he is American, but that he shall not be discriminated against for that reason.

Another plea is that music shall receive recognition in the national Government. Nothing can give the world outside a better and stronger idea that we are something besides dollar-grabbers, commercialists, interested in commerce and industry, than the fact that we do recognize the value of music, art and literature, and give the arts representation in the national Government.

Many things remain to be done and cooperation is solicited from all quarters where music is appreciated. The large number of picture players—48,000 musicians—must do their part in firmly establishing as a National institution, the Musical Alliance of the United States. Send in your name, accompanied by a crisp one dollar bill, to Milton Weil, the secretary, and he will enroll you as a member. America is practically the only country of any importance in the world that has not its Minister of Fine Arts. How long are you going to allow this to continue?

Exhibitors Mutual Provide Music Score.

Robertson-Cole Company have the right idea regarding music for the pictures. For Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" released by the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, they have provided a special score. These scores are available at all their exchanges and every exhibitor booking this wonderful film may rest assured that suitable musical atmosphere will surround the beautiful scenes of the islands of the Southern Pacific.

Martin Johnson personally supervised the setting, and from him were obtained many original melodies which had become familiar to his ear during his sojourn among these strange people. These themes are properly orchestrated in an ultra modern manner befitting the characteristic atmosphere.

The dance of the married woman upon the island of Vao is seen true to life and the flute and sand block accompaniment is claimed to be most realistic.

Savage music alone will hold the atmosphere and little resort is made to Oriental numbers. No exhibitor can afford to be without this musical service.

Our Rainbow Soldier Boys

Written For, and Dedicated To, the Rainbow Division Words and Music by

BETTY TILLOTSON

Read the words and rejoice with us in the wonderful sentiment that they express.
Your boy will be singing the song when he comes home; why not be prepared to join him in the chorus:

"We are all mighty glad to meet you,
Our Rainbow soldier boys.
We are all mighty glad to greet you;
You fill our hearts with joy.
When we sadly saw the train go,
We pinned our faith to the Rainbow,
And we're all mighty proud of you,
Our Rainbow soldier boys."

PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL of PICTURE PLAYING
Strand Theatre Los Angeles

"Price of Victory" Poorly Presented.

Sunday, December 8, there was presented at the 44th Street Theatre by the Arrow Film Company a picture called "The Price of Victory," the same being a pictorial review of the prominent part played in the world war by the Ghurkas, of India.

The orchestra opened the performance by playing "God Save the King," "The Marsellaise" and "The Star Spangled Banner." After the chairman had extolled the virtues of Britain and her colonies, Captain Tupper, chief organizer of the Mercantile Seaman's Union, of England, was introduced.

His address was eloquent and in fine taste. He appealed to America to back up the recent pledge of his union, viz.: That for seven years no German would be allowed to work on English vessels, no German cargoes would be handled by English seamen, and the flag of the Hun would receive no salute from the union. He produced indisputable evidence of the perfidy of the Germans, and convinced his audience that the step was justifiable from every standpoint.

Dr. Girdswood was then introduced as the Canadian who had photographed the film called "The Price of Victory." After a short explanatory speech of patriotic favor, the picture was screened.

There is no question regarding the merits of the feature. It has much educational value, and is intensely interesting. We wish we could praise the music in like manner; but, alas, for the efforts of amateurs! Remember that the picture deals with the East Indians, and, although the location is in France, Orientalism predominates at all times.

Only one number, "An Indian Melody," was used, and the balance of the setting consisted of waltzes and marches, with an occasional overture. The farcical side of the music lay in the fact that "Raymond" and "Light Cavalry" overtures are both distinctly German. No attempt was made for synchrony, and the music was broken off in the middle of a phrase or upon the second beat of the measure. The music actually burlesqued the picture, and nothing worse has been heard in New York in many a moon.

Sergei Rachmaninoff Comes to America.

Unheralded and unexpected, one of the most prominent Russian musicians of the age, Sergei Rachmaninoff, slipped quietly into New York City a few days ago on a steamer from Copenhagen.

This is not his first glimpse of America, because about nine years ago he appeared as pianist and an honor conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

M. Rachmaninoff brings with him his wife and daughter, and is stopping at the Hotel Netherlands.

When the Bolshevik regime began to create an unpleasant atmosphere in Russia, M. Rachmaninoff went to Denmark, and gave several concerts in that country, as well as in Norway and Sweden. He says that the musical life in these countries is quite normal, and that good concerts are really more frequent than in peace times, as these countries are a place of refuge for many musicians, who, under ordinary conditions, would be elsewhere.

M. Rachmaninoff was not able to bring manuscripts with him here, but is planning to give some of his time to composition while in this country. He has in his possession, however, a revision of his first piano concerto, which he obtained in Copenhagen through the courtesy of the Swedish Minister to Petrograd. This composition being one of his early works, does not entirely satisfy him, so he is revising the orchestration and some of the piano part. Only a week before the outbreak of the war, M. Rachmaninoff sent the final revised proofs of his "Third Symphony" to Leipzig, where practically all Russian music has always been printed, and he has never heard anything about it since. But now that peace has come, he hopes eventually to recover it.

He says: "Now Russia is freed from the Germans, who were really the power behind the Bolsheviki, my poor country will soon come upon better times. We can none of us ever be sufficiently grateful to your nation and its magnificent President."

"Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep."

Whenever a bass singer wins enough applause to warrant an encore, and he reappears—we find ourselves thinking, "Now he will sing 'Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep'." We are seldom disappointed.

Mrs. Emma Hart Willard, the writer of this song, was another gifted New Englander, being born in Berlin, Conn., in 1787. She was one of seventeen children, but had most delightful home surroundings and parents of superior mentality. Remarkable from earliest girlhood, she became a woman whose fame as an educator extended throughout the world.

Her talent as an authoress—and she had to her credit many books on a diversity of subjects—was only an incidental side-line in her busy life. She was primarily identified with the education of women, and consecrated her life to the intellectual uplift of her sex with a singleness of purpose that precluded the possibility of many other interests.

Returning from a European trip which she made in 1830, she walked the deck of the boat one morning and watched the waves as they played on the sides of the vessel. Turning towards the Duke De Choiseul, who was one of her party, she dreamily said: "Rocked in the cradle of the deep, I lay me down in peace to sleep." The words spoken so spontaneously appealed to him as being worthy of preservation. He, accordingly, urged Mrs. Willard to write a poem which should embody the two lines she had just repeated, and promised that, when completed, he would set them to music. She went at once to her stateroom, and in a few minutes had written the verses as we know them. Giving them the title of the first line, she took them to the duke, who, faithful to his word, composed the music. His air did not receive popular favor, and is never heard now.

The words of this little poem have been so long associated with the name of Mrs. Willard that few of us have questioned the origin. But the National Dictionary of Autobiography gives credit to Thomas Noel, a poet, who was practically a contemporary of Mrs. Willard, being born in 1799. This gentleman had to his credit several pastoral rhymes. If the Noel claim is authentic, "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep" is in no sense an American song.

Sometime later, John Philip Knight, an Englishman by birth, wrote the tune with which we are familiar, and the little song was launched on its popular and perennial journey. The gentleman responsible for the music spent several years in America, both as a teacher of music in New York City and in the capacity of musical instructor in Mrs. Willard's Female Seminary in Troy, New York. Unfortunately, Mr. Knight permitted himself to become dishonored and hurriedly left the country, disgraced in the eyes of his former friends. However, the weak man and the splendid woman have perpetrated their names with the masses not for what their lives signified, but for the simple little ballad which meant but a trifle to either of them. Such is the potency of song.

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS" TELLS OF VICTORY

EXHIBITORS may well take the remarkable record of "Under Four Flags" at the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres and the rebookings of the film at the latter theatre and at the Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, as a reliable indication of the true worth of a picture which New York reviewers termed the "most marvelous of films" and by far the best of the series released by the Government through the Division of Films.

The attraction of the film that seems to extend through the entire length of the several reels, is the intimate, close-up views of the battles and activities that led up to the close of the war, the public seeming to be particularly anxious to view the events of such momentous historical and patriotic interest.

"Under Four Flags" is a remarkable production, without doubt the most marvelous motion picture of the war ever screened. It is a living, breathing story of the greatest event in the history of the world, the story of how democracy defeated autocracy; a story more skillfully constructed and logically developed than the most wonderful fictional drama ever conceived.

The picture is shown in a series of several episodes, showing first the conference at Versailles when General Foch was made commander-in-chief of the Allied armies. Then the Americans are shown in their first active participation in the battles that were to end the war. They are seen in action in Belleau Woods and in the famous battle of Chateau Thierry, and fighting in conjunction with the French in driving back the enemy. Another episode shows the army of General Haig on the English front, while others show the thrilling and daring fighting of the Italian forces on the Piave and in the region of Mount Grappa. At St. Mihiel the Americans are seen in the first engagement as a complete force under the command of American officers. The closing episode features the recovery by French and American soldiers of a little village in France long held by the Germans and General Pershing's arrival and review of the troops in celebration of the event.

Technically and pictorially, "Under Four Flags" is not surpassed by any other motion picture. The photography is remarkable. The scenes were taken by the United States Signal Corps and the Allied Army cameramen, to whom the world owes everlasting gratitude for their part in this wonderful pictorial history.

And so, while the tumult of war is over, the shouting has not died and it won't die as long as "Under Four Flags" is on the screen. If General Pershing and his men could hear the cheers that go up when audiences see them standing victorious on French soil, they would be almost afraid to come home to face the demonstration that is waiting for them.

Kansas City to Launch New Organization Soon

AMUSEMENT interests of Kansas City will within a few days perfect their plan of co-operation and organization, and the new association, embracing the various branches, will be launched. It has been found that all phases can work well together, and that it is possible to frame an organization through which the mutual interests can be advanced, while the various branches maintain their own associations for the prosecution of their own special activities.

The Exhibitors' League of Kansas City held a meeting November 29, presided over by W. B. Tuteur, president, at which film men were present, to discuss the proposed new organization. Charles W. Harden, chairman of the committee that is preparing the plan of organization for the united amusement interests, and L. D. Balsly, one of the promoters of the movement, reported the tentative plans. They involve a comprehensive membership of exhibitors, exchange men, supply men, and speaking stage representatives, the aim being to get as large a membership of individuals as possible, from among all. Speakers at the meeting expressed their opinions that it would be necessary to maintain the exhibitors' league, and interest therein—just as the exchange men will probably continue their co-operation with each other, and perhaps even form an association to make such co-operation more effective.

Trade Views of "The Common Cause."

The splendid reception given to J. Stuart Blackton's patriotic production, "The Common Cause," at its initial presentation to exhibitors at the Rialto Theatre, New York, the first week of December, is being duplicated all over the country in the Vitagraph exchange cities. Private showings for groups of exhibitors have been in progress in all Vitagraph branches, and word comes that first run bookings are well under way.

The exhibitors' aids prepared to assist exhibitors in the proper exploitation of "The Common Cause" is now in the hands of all Vitagraph exchanges.

SOME STATES EXPERIENCE SETBACKS

New Influenza Outbreaks in Iowa, Michigan and Ohio—Cincinnati Theatres Place Ban On Children—Other Sections Show Improvement

RECURRENCE of the influenza epidemic in Des Moines, where patrons of theatres were allowed to occupy only alternate rows; in Cincinnati, where children are banned, and several other places in Ohio, which are again closed, together with about half of Michigan, which has been again placed under quarantine, are the outstanding features of this week's advices from Moving Picture World correspondents.

Reports from California indicate that cities which followed San Francisco's lead and adopted the precaution of requiring theatre patrons to wear gauze masks, have pro ted thereby, while other cities are in many instances still closed. Many localities of South Dakota are not free of the ban. Indianapolis rescinds the gauze mask order, which the Board of Health advises was found to be beneficial. Several cities and towns of the Northwest are still in the grip of the epidemic.

New Cincinnati Outbreak Causes Ban on Children

A RETURN of the influenza epidemic, with an unusual proportion of cases among children, covering virtually all of Ohio, resulted recently in the moving picture theatres in several cities again being closed or at least barred to children. The latter was the action taken in Cincinnati, where the board of health on December 2 issued orders forbidding children under 16 years to attend theatres of any sort or to ride on street cars. At the same time the schools were closed, indicating the opinion of the authorities that the fresh outbreak was principally among children.

It is estimated that over 5,000 Cincinnati school children have the influenza, and while the cases are mild the danger involved in continued spread of the disease is such as to make the authorities determined to stamp it out, if possible. The exhibitors are co-operating fully with the health authorities, in order to stop the epidemic, if possible, and thereby prevent even further restrictions on theatregoing, such as prevailed during October and up to November 11.

Exhibitors Pledge Co-operation.

Following the announcement of new restrictions applying to children attending the theatres. John Weinig, attorney and proprietor of the Western Plaza Theatre, presented to the Board of Health on behalf of his own and a number of the downtown theatres, including the Grand, the Lyric, the Olympic, Keith's, the Empress, the Family, the Walnut, the Strand and the Bijou, a resolution in which the managers or proprietors of those houses expressed their full approval of the action of the board, and pledged their co-operation in enforcing the order prohibiting children from attending the theatres during the prevalence of the epidemic. The enforcement of the order will, of course, hurt the revenues of the exhibitors considerably, as many children attend the theatres, especially in the suburbs, and there are numerous families where, if the children cannot go, the parents must also stay at home. It is considered much better, however, to get along with business thus restricted than to face the necessity of a complete shutdown, and the exhibitors will accordingly do everything in their power to see that the orders of the health authorities are fully met.

San Francisco Opening Aided by Mask Ordinance

BUSINESS conditions in the San Francisco territory are steadily improving, but theatres are not reopening in the country districts as rapidly as was expected. Some opened on the same date as the San Francisco houses, only to be closed again when new cases of influenza developed. In other towns the date of opening has been postponed from time to time, frequently at the last minute, causing much trouble to exhibitors and film exchanges. In the face of these set-backs the list of open theatres is steadily growing and now includes not less than 75 per cent. of the houses in Northern and Central California. In almost every instance the communities which followed the lead of San Francisco and made the use of gauze masks compulsory have routed the epidemic and business is going on as usual, while those that disdained to take precautions are still in a state of quarantine.

In the San Francisco Bay district business has shown a steady improvement since the day the theatres reopened, but is still below normal. Heavy rains have served to keep people at home and there is still a feeling of uneasiness in some quarters in regard to mingling with crowds. Those who are attending moving picture theatres are enjoying entertainment of an unusually high order, managers vieing with each other to put on the finest shows. Special attention is being paid to music and many houses are making use of orchestras for the first time.

Many South Dakota Cities Now Free of Influenza Ban

WHILE residents of all cities and towns of South Dakota had special reasons for thanksgiving because of the ending of the war, some of the South Dakota communities had a double reason for rejoicing on Thanksgiving Day because of the raising of the ban placed on public gatherings, moving picture houses, other theatres and schools as a result of the influenza epidemic.

In Sioux Falls the ban was lifted and moving picture houses and other places were reopened after having been closed for a period of six weeks. The ban on city schools was not removed, however, until December 2.

Other South Dakota towns which have reopened with a rush of business are Madison, Montrose, Humboldt and Egan, all in Miner county. Moving picture men of the Sunshine State had great cause for thanksgiving. The ban has been lifted in practically all towns in Minnesota, North Dakota, Wisconsin and Iowa.

Alternate Rows Capacity for Des Moines Theatres

A SITUATION almost approaching epidemic proportions has resulted in Des Moines theatres permitting patrons to sit only in every other row. It was with considerable difficulty that the places of amusement escaped closing altogether. After a lull the epidemic broke out badly in Des Moines and immediately the usual agitation of "close the theatres" was started, First the use of influenza masks as a compulsory measure was tried out, with poor results, as patrons either regarded the use of the mask as an imposition or a joke. The measure fell through after one day's trial, and then the agitation for a closed town started. Special committees were appointed for and against closing by the respective parties interested and a merry battle followed.

Finally it was decided to permit the theatres to remain open by using half capacity, spreading the seating arrangement through alternate rows. This is working out with fair results and managers say is far better than closing altogether. Programs have been considerably curtailed and less expensive features offered for the time being.

Remaining open is a good thing for the industry in general in Iowa, as indications pointed to the theatres again being closed throughout the State, following the lead of Des Moines, had such a condition prevailed here. The epidemic again is subsiding and the half-lid will be lifted within ten days.

Half of Michigan Is Again Under Influenza Quarantine

IT looks as if Michigan is in for "hard luck" for the remainder of the winter. Although the state ban on theatres and public gatherings was lifted November 5, right now nearly half of the State is closed by order of local authorities and in some sections there is talk of a quarantine. On Dec. 4 the city of Saginaw was shut down, so that with Bay City it makes two of the leading towns in the State closed for moving pictures outside of Detroit and Grand Rapids, which are still open. Regardless of all the co-operation and precautions given and promised by the local exhibitors, the health authorities closed them up.

In Adrian, Elwyn M. Simons, of the Family Theatre, put up a stiff fight and has won. "At a hearing of all the doctors and the board of health, we asked for a hearing and took two attorneys up there fully determined that if the health authorities shut up the theatres this time bargain basements, ten-cent stores and, in fact, a general closing of every thing would be requested, otherwise we would get an injunction restraining them from closing us on discrimination grounds," writes Mr. Simons to the Detroit correspondent of the Moving Picture World. "The affair proved to be very spirited and while we put up some fight, we are still open. We found that one of the State statutes, according to our attorney, states that it is not within the health officers' power to close up business until they have conducted a rigid quarantine, therefore we are open with their approval unless the death rate continues to grow, and if it does everything will be closed.

"Business is very bad due to the fact that people are afraid to come out on account of all this agitation. If ever there was an urgent need of organization, the time is now at hand, when it should be brought about. This closing up habit is getting altogether too conspicuous and is proving dangerous to the motion picture industry. There is positive discrimination when they close theatres and let stores remain open."

Benton Harbor, Manistee and dozens and dozens of smaller towns throughout Michigan are closed, and Dr. Olin, head of the State Board of Health, says he looks for influenza trouble until spring.

Dismiss Case Against Terre Haute Exhibitors

THE cases against the fifteen motion picture exhibitors and theatre men at Terre Haute, Ind., who were arrested Thanksgiving Day for failing to obey the board of health's closing order, were dismissed in city court on the motion of William E. Horsley, prosecuting attorney.

The motion for dismissal was made after it was shown by attorneys for the men that the order upon which the arrests were made had not been regularly entered upon the records of the board, and was not, for that reason, available as evidence. This view of the case was concurred in by Judge Paul R. Shafer, who ordered the cases dismissed and the defendants discharged.

The defendant in the case was Shannon Katzenbach, proprietor of the American Theatre, who had been selected to stand trial in what was to be used as a test case for the entire number of exhibitors and theatre men arrested.

Immediately following the trial a new order was issued by the board of health, closing all theatres, places of amusement, all stores, except drug stores, and all churches from 6 p. m. Saturday evening until the usual opening time Monday morning. All of the places stipulated in the order, with the exception of a few churches, complied with it.

Prominent physicians say they believe the peak of the epidemic in Terre Haute has been reached and that the disease now will rapidly decrease.

Kansas City Suffers Second Grip Visitation

THE expected return of the influenza epidemic was accompanied by regulations and bans—but they affected only the schools in Kansas City. The large increase in cases caused special meetings of the Board of Health—but the effort was to control the reports of cases, to enforce quarantines on houses where the disease was found, to educate the public to take care of itself when it had influenza. The board of health took no action toward closing places of business, or restricting the number of patrons in any establishment, or curtailing the hours of merchandising.

The school board, however, closed the schools, on Tuesday, November 26. While it was hoped that the schools might be reopened the Monday after Thanksgiving, the closing order remained into effect for the following week.

Some churches suspended services on Sunday, December 1, but as a rule church services, as well as other public gatherings, were held through the second period of epidemic.

The amusement interests of Kansas City were prepared to discuss with officials the matter of a ban, if the subject had been brought up. The special committee representing moving picture, speaking stage and other allied interests, had discovered, however, that any introduction of the subject would be prejudicial, since there was no intention of imposing a ban. Because of the fact that the interests had got together, and were ready for harmonious action, there was no interference with the course that seemed best—the matter was left entirely in the hands of the committee, which was prepared to call for help if any was needed.

Northwest Still in Influenza Grip.

The confusion in the Northwest caused by some towns opening and then being forced to close again on account of a second increase in the influenza epidemic has not entirely disappeared. Walla Walla, Wash., was again closed after having been open for a little over a week. Several other smaller towns were also reclosed.

Pendleton, Ore., has not been opened at this writing.

The number of new cases has taken an increase in Seattle, but not on such a scale that a reclosing is considered imminent.

Indianapolis Lifts Gauze Mask Order.

The Indianapolis board of health has rescinded its order requiring the wearing of gauze masks in theatres and other public places and has announced that conditions in the influenza-pneumonia situation are more favorable than they have been for some time. The wearing of the masks, the board members say, aided materially in reducing the number of cases.

Dayton Puts Ban on Children Again.

The health board of Dayton has again seen fit to place a ban on children attending the theatres and places of amusement. The order issued Monday, December 9, went into effect at 6 p. m. that day. An order about three days previous to this one forbade the sale of standing room in any of the theatres. The order states that the crowds may congregate in the lobbies, but must not get inside the theatre proper. These measures were taken because of the recurrence of the influenza.

The suburban houses will again suffer, according to statements brought out at a meeting of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, which was called Monday by Al. Kinzeler, secretary. Some of the suburban managers stated it would be suicide to them should the children be eliminated.

Back to Medford's Rialto Is Moran, Mustered Out

A. J. MORAN, who, with H. L. Percy, runs the Rialto Theatre, at Medford, Ore., spent a few days recently looking about New York after having been mustered out of the army at Camp Lee, Virginia, where he was in training for an officer's commission. Naturally, he included the office of The Moving Picture World in his calls and entertained us with some of his camp experiences, but he said he had concluded that the army was no place to be in in peace times, so he was going back to help run the Rialto in Medford.

Medford is a town of 12,000 inhabitants and is located in the southwestern corner of Oregon. The Rialto Theatre seats 700 persons and has an equipment that cost $14,000 including, a Style 40 Fotoplayer that cost $5,000, two Simplex projectors, a Hertner transverter, a four-lamp B. & L. dissolver, and a seating equipment of Hayward Brothers-Wakefield chairs that cost $4.85 each.

Speaking of the Rialto projecting room Mr. Moran declared that it was as fine as anything he had seen in the East, and that it would make even Richardson sit up and take notice. It is 22 feet long by 15 feet deep, and has a ceiling that is 12 feet high. It is complete with every modern device and most approved method of wiring.

The Rialto works on the open booking plan with four changes weekly, but sometimes runs good pictures three days. The admission prices are 10, 20 and 30 cents for both matinee and evening performances. Special newspaper advertising is used extensively and business has always been uniformly good.

Mr. Moran was still wearing khaki and was a fine example of the husky American soldier who has proved his fighting qualities in this war. His training camp experience of the past two months had made him as hard as nails, he said, and had added two pounds to his weight, notwithstanding that he began work at 5 o'clock in the morning and kept on the jump till 9 o'clock at night during that time.

THREE NEW RED CROSS PICTURES.

The newest Red Cross films which are being released by the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross include three subjects called "New Faces for Old," "Homeward Bound" and "Russia, the World Problem." These one-reelers will go through General Film Company exchanges as regular Red Cross program subjects.

"New Faces for Old" has already been reviewed and is considered the strongest subject of the series. It shows in detail how soldiers in France, so badly disfigured that their own children do not know them, are transformed by the aid of specially modeled silver wire masks to look just like they did before they were mutilated.

The Russian film is full of live topical interest. The "Homeward Bound" film relates to the many little intimate touches of "mothering" given American doughboys who are just about to return to their native shore. This reel is full of frolic as well, since it shows how the soldiers amuse themselves.

BUSINESS HEALTHY AROUND NEWARK

Following Recovery from Epidemic, Jersey Houses Are Slowed Up by High Cost of Turkey, but Patrons Now Are Flowing In—Many Houses Lack Lobby Displays

By Sam Spedon

FROM what we have observed in our itinerary in that part of Jersey in and around Newark that we have visited and recorded, business is in a very healthy condition. The Thanksgiving holiday had a tendency to lessen patronage, shopping for turkey at 45 to 65 cents a pound naturally absorbing the attention and considerable of the loose change that might have found its way into the coffers of the movies. A summary of all investigations convinces us that following the epidemic business was slow in coming back, but now that it has returned it is here to stay, not forgetting that the holidays naturally will cause more or less fluctuation in attendance Christmas week and the first week of January.

One thing impressed us very forcibly; that was the lack of lobby display or dress in a great many of the theatres. It was somewhat of a disappointment to find that those places that evidently needed it most had not taken advantage of the four weeks shutdown to freshen up a bit. The same comment could be made of screen settings—they were woefully plain and neglected.

If we were a manager of a theatre with no initiative in exercising our ingenuity, we guess we would be like some others—just employes with an empty title of manager. Without initiative and the wherewithal to exercise it, there would be no hope for an enterprising manager nor even a chance to display our ability.

We ask ourselves, are the managers showmen with a lasting or permanent interest in the pictures? Are they simply taking a chance to make money, regardless of showmanship, or are they simply in the business on speculation, to sell to the first man who offers them a profit on their investment?

The Real Theatres Swallow Others.

There is no science in discerning the difference in the places that are in the exhibition business to stay and those in it as a speculation only. There is no wonder so many are swallowed up by the honest-to-God theatres.

The consensus of opinion is against spectacular war pictures. The war stuff is well supplied in the news weeklies. Incidental to a story, war material is acceptable, but not too much of it. Big war pictures are out of vogue in this section of New Jersey.

The difference in the personality of managers is very noticeable. In our visits to the theatres on these tours of investigation we asked nothing, not even free admission, subscription or any other monetary consideration. In some instances we were received with an air of suspicion as though we were almost too affable to be human. In other cases they were pleased to make our acquaintance and acted as if they were used to meeting honest people, making new friends and patrons. In the former case, had we been a new-comer, as a patron, to their theatre we would have gone to the theatre down the street where the manager in charge was more like the latter kind. Personality very often accounts for the absence or presence of an audience.

Mitchell Building Up Carlton.

At Market and Halsey streets we stopped in William Fox's Carlton Theatre, one of the oldest in Newark, situated at the busiest center of the leading thoroughfare. Under the management of Williard K. Mitchell, during his six weeks service here, the patronage has increased, although it has a steady going attendance of the old residents. Mr. Mitchell has designed and prepared a number of new settings for the stage, which will greatly enhance the attractiveness of this somewhat antiquated but popular showhouse. Mr. Mitchell, while one of the younger managers, is a man of progressive ideas, and we regret that these men with good ideas are not given the facilities to put them into practice—we mean the wherewithal to display them.

On Market street, just below the Carlton, we ventured into the Strand, where we met Charles Wurtz in charge. For a 5.30 o'clock performance there was not a poor attendance. The Strand is a 1,200-seat house and employs a good organist, who plays the pictures with creditable judgment. Like the Carlton, it enjoys the full benefit of a location on the main thoroughfare.

Here's a Bouquet for the Newark.

J. B. McNally, who was formerly manager of Keeney's in Newark, is now in charge of the Newark Theatre, undoubtedly the finest motion picture theatre in that city. This not because it is the newest and most up-to-date, but because it is well managed and displays a knowledge of presentation that challenges our admiration. It is equipped with all the latest paraphernalia, with settings that are second to none anywhere in this country. We witnessed the evening performance and listened to his twenty-piece orchestra, and feel we are noting a just encomium of what we actually saw and heard.

A visit to the William Fox Terminal Theatre at 84 Park place to enjoy the afternoon performance afforded a pleasant two hours. Jules Gerstles has been in charge about two months, and notwithstanding a holiday week, the house was packed to the ropes. The manager is gradually installing new settings and novelties that display his ideas of showmanship on one of the busiest thoroughfares of Newark.

Bright Lights Aplenty in Paterson.

Just to broaden our views, we went over to Paterson, where there is no lack of bright lights and real human cosmopolitan interest. It is not the white light trail of New York, but for all there is plenty of action and no scarcity of "movie fans." We were convinced of this when we entered the U. S. Theatre on Main street, near Market, where every one of the 1,600 seats were filled and patrons were still coming. Adam Adams, who is associated with his brother Peter, the proprietor, gave us a cordial reception and many sidelights on his diversified patronage.

The Garden, 1,300 seats, is one of the Jacob Fabian houses, which are among the best in the country, members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The Regent, of Paterson, is also one of the Fabian theatres. James J. Malone is the resident manager of the Garden and performs his duties with excellent judgment and showmanship. While we were talking to Mr. Malone, our friend, Charles L. Dooley, who is manager in chief of the Fabian houses, walked in upon us and we promised to give the Regent the onceover and see "My Cousin" before the week was out.

After paying our admission we stepped into the Lyric, seating about 500, on Main street, near Market, under the management of Max Gold, who extended to us the courtesy of the house, which is built on the lines of the old Nickelodeon. It was well filled and showing a miscellaneous program, catering more to the "drop-in" element, at an eleven-cent admission.

William Anderson, of the Grand, was out when we happened in. The Grand is very much of the same order as the Lyric—the same price of admission and the same character of pictures. The house was full.

Regent Has 500 Surplus.

On Saturday evening we took in the Regent, 2,500 capacity. Charles L. Dooley, the manager, was on the job, and while he gave us every attention possible he had his hands full with his house and with about five hundred or more waiting in the lobby for the second performance. The Regent sets back from Market street on a sort of alleyway which runs into Main street. It is not a new house, but has been reconstructed with a balcony. There are no intervening posts and every seat gives a clear view of the screen. While we were talking, Mr. Fabian came in. He is a keen observer, alive to the possibilities of the growth of Paterson. Mr. Dooley gave us to understand that Mr. Fabian has plans for the building of a bigger and more beautiful theatre on Market street.

In the Hill section we came across the Savoy, 101 Springfield avenue, under the management of Machat & Kelly. We were surprised to meet our old friend N. Machat in charge. He used to have a theatre at 106th street and Fifth avenue, New York. The Savoy seats 1,900, built on the old legitimate lines. It is well patronized and equipped with one of the largest organs. Although an afternoon performance, it was about four-fifths filled. Admissions were eleven and seventeen cents. Machat has also leased the Forest Hill Theatre, which section we will visit later.

Just opposite we stopped in the "Hill," 1,800 seats. A. J. Mack, the manager, was not in, but we saw Mrs. Mack, to whom we are indebted for a pleasant reception. The Hill is one of the older theatres in this section, remodeled to suit the full requirements of the present moving picture theatre.

Found Kridel Looking Up the Dope.

When we entered the Goodwin, on Broad street, we were confronted by Moe Kridel, the manager, sitting at the ticket box with a copy of the Moving Picture World on his knees. Our card was all that was necessary to receive a cordial welcome, a real heart-to-heart talk about conditions in general and a thorough inspection of his well-kept and filled house of 850 seats, at twenty-five cents plus the war tax.

The Paramount Theatre, on Broad and Hill streets, was a novelty to us. The auditorium is on the second floor, with a lobby entrance on either street. Under the direction of William B. Putnam and George Jacobs they have succeeded in making a success out of what was considered an impossibility. It is one of the most attractive playhouses we have ever seen, beautifully decorated in gold and white and a balcony of upholstered chairs and loge boxes. Altogether it seats about 1,500. Mr. Jacobs adds a personality to the Paramount that makes meeting him a pleasurable experience.

Looks Over Passaic's Montauk.

In Passaic we spent an hour at the Montauk and about the same time at the Play House, both owned by the Taylor Company. At the former, which seats about 1,000, we met John Essex in charge. It is a well kept house, orchestra and balcony, and does credit to the city, which is, of course, much smaller than Newark and Paterson.

At the Play House, built as a legitimate theatre, where vaudeville and pictures comprise the program, we met Mr. Taylor, who was courteous but not communicative. He would not impart his first name, he said, when we asked it; I am not looking for fame, simply fortune, which he was obtaining through the price of admission. Judging from the house he had 2,000 capacity and every seat filled. We believe he is getting his share.

The Garden Theatre, H. K. Hecht, manager, although 600 seats, was playing to capacity at an afternoon performance. From all we could see, business was not by any means poor in Passaic and there is no lack of moving picture devotees, who systematically support their community theatres.

LONG TITLES ARE AN EVIL, SAYS KUNSKY

Detroiter Declares Exhibitors Can Get No Showing in Ads or in General Exploitation

A PROTEST against the use of long titles for feature productions is made by John H. Kunsky, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for the State of Michigan. In a recent letter to the New York offices of First National, he said:

"I wonder whether the trade journals have ever investigated the results to exhibitors of the long titles for productions? It is an evil which has contributed many difficulties to the ordinary troubles of the theatre operator.

"In many cases manufacturers put such long titles on their productions that it is almost impossible for the exhibitors to get any kind of a showing in their newspaper advertising without spreading copy over half the page at an enormous cost. Take such titles as 'The Woman the Germans Shot,' 'The Dawn of Understanding,' 'The Man Who Wouldn't Tell,' 'For the Freedom of the World,' 'Italy's Far Flung Battle Line,' 'Rosemary Climbs the Heights,' 'Why I Would Not Marry,' or any one of a score of others that have been released recently, and analyze the exhibitor problems in advertising them.

Long Title Requires Extra Column.

"We know that a newspaper ad, like a trade journal ad, should have three predominating features. There should be a catch line, an illustration or an effect of some description that will attract the eye. Then the name of the production should be sufficiently large to stand out. Next comes the name of the theatre. In advertising a long title, the exhibitor is obliged to take a long, narrow space or add possibly a column width to his usual space in order to display it properly.

"In lettering his banners or lobby cards he cannot give sufficient size and boldness to a long title to make it visible at a distance. It has to be lettered small so that it will fit the standard size space of the lobby frames, or the banner position across the front of the house. This detracts from its advertising value and passers-by are inclined to ignore it for something else that is more easily seen and read.

"The short, snappy title is the best self-salesman. It gets the best showing in the newspapers; it is easily displayed in banner and lobby card copy, and it lends itself to any number of possibilities barred to long titles because of the expense involved or the impracticability of the effect.

"Manufacturers should give careful consideration to these points in naming their productions. One word titles are the ideal, but of course, they cannot be used for every production. Three words should be the maximum permitted when there are more than an average of four letters to the word. A four-word title is difficult to break in laying out an ad, and from a practical standpoint it should never be used when there is any alternative.

"I am very sure that consideration on this point by producers would be of great assistance to exhibitors and would be appreciated by them as one less item to worry about."

Weddige Plans Housewarming.

C. A. Weddige, president of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, Film Building, Detroit, which disposes of Simplex projectors in Michigan, expects shortly to have a "house warming" in celebration of his enlarged quarters on the second floor of the Film Building.

In anticipation of an increase in his business he has provided for more floor space.

Mr. Weddige is well-known to the exhibiting fraternity in Michigan and has planned an extensive advertising campaign to keep before them the merits claimed for his machine by its manufacturers.

Reichenbach Tells P. A.'s How He Put 'Em Over

AT the regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held December 5 at Rector's, copies of the association's twenty-four page year book were distributed. Besides being an attractive example of the printer's art, the book contains an abundance of interesting information regarding the association, including a brief history of the organization since its inception in August, 1916; a chronology of the year's activities, the constitution and by-laws, a tribute to the members in the military and naval service, list of officers and standing committees, individual portraits of all the members, etc.

Harry Reichenbach, who has just returned from Europe, where for some time he has been engaged in propaganda work for the Committee on Public Information, gave an interesting sketch of the labors of himself and his associates in breaking down the morale of the German army chiefly through the medium of literature distributed over the German lines.

The association has authorized Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., who left Wednesday for Los Angeles to engage in publicity work, to organize a branch of the A. M. P. A. among the motion picture publicity men on the Coast.

New members recently elected include C. L. Yearsley and Earl Hudson, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit; N. Grandlund, of the Marcus Loew Enterprises, and Jay Gove, of the Fox Film Corporation.

Peace Party to See Metro Subjects.

Among the many film subjects on board the George Washington, the ship carrying the Presidential peace party, are three of Mme. Nazimova's—"Revelation," "Toys of Fate," and "Eye for Eye." In addition to the Nazimova productions Screen Classics, Inc., features and Metro's All Star Series productions will be part of the exhibitions. Among these will be Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne's "Romeo and Juliet"; "Blue Jeans," starring Viola Dana; "Lest We Forget," "My Own United States," "Draft 258," and "The Slacker."

"The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," Screen Classics, Inc., besides being shown aboard the ship will be presented to the representatives of the different foreign nations gathered in Paris for the Peace Conference. Count di Cappico, head of the Italian Commission in America, who will personally attend to the Versailles exhibition of the picture, will then take it to Metz for a presentation before the American and Allied commanders and their soldiers on Christman Day.

Bruner to Exploit Serial Stars.

Frank V. Bruner has resigned his position as director of publicity for the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation to become manager of serial publicity for Pathe. Mr. Bruner has had long experience in the field of theatrical and motion picture publicity and will specialize on the serial campaign Pathe is planning. Just now his particular space-filling pets are Miss Pearl White and Miss Ruth Roland, Pathe's two famous serial stars.

TALKING IT OVER WITH DE MILLE

West Coast Producer Expresses Views on Essential Elements of the Moving Picture, and Places Dramatic Quality of Photo Fiction at the Head of the List

By Edward Weitzel

AN opportunity to talk things over with Cecil De Mille meant the granting of a desire to meet the man who first put drama into five-reel screen fiction. The statement contained in the last eleven words may bring out several protests. Perhaps the interview will make matters clear. It opened in this wise:

"I've been anxious to meet you, Mr. De Mille, ever since the night I saw 'The Little American.' That was the first moving picture that drew me over onto the edge of my seat and kept me there until the finish. I had been looking at pictures all day and both eyes and brain were tired. To fix and hold my attention throughout the entire length of 'The Little American' required unbroken suspense. The play had it. Everything was obliterated except the fate of the men and woman created by the dramatist. Even the personality of the star was pushed completely into the background; Mary Pickford's identity was lost in the character she assumed. She was merely one of the players. The theme dominated everything and everyone in the cast. 'This is real drama!' was my mental ejaculation at the finish. 'May its number increase!'"

Cecil De Mille gave no evidence of being offended at such an estimate of his craftsmanship. He even smiled in a friendly fashion as he seated himself at Jesse Lasky's desk in the New York office, and proceeded to explain his own views on the essential elements of moving picture fiction.

"Of my own work," said he, "my favorite picture is 'Old Wives for New.' But I am glad to hear you speak so of 'The Little American.' Drama is the common ground where all classes meet. Its laws never change, and I have always tried to tell a screen story without putting stumbling blocks in the way of its action. A pair of little pigs, or even a whole litter, may be beautifully appealing, but I have artistic objections to holding up the suspense, which is the life and soul of drama, while the young porkers are being admired. 'The Little American' had a simple, straightforward plot that called for a clear, straightforward telling. I tried to give its scenes and incidents the balance and adjustment which tradition and my own experience have taught me would supply the strongest dramatic pull. Once the mood of a story is determined upon it must be maintained to the end. 'The Little American' was all heart interest, the emotions alone were stirred. In stage or screen fiction of this nature it's so easy to divert the interest and bring the spectator back to his own self. One goes to the theatre to get away from his own existence, to share the emotions and live the lives of the people that the skill of the dramatist and the producer can make very real. Why do anything to destroy the illusion? Why reveal to the man out in front that it is all a puppet show? Other forms of screen fiction have greater latitude, but the tension, suspense and emotional stress that constitute drama will always be the ruling forces of the photoplay."

Classifying Screen Fiction.

"You agree with me then, Mr. De Mille, that the screen drama is distinct from the photo novel, and that a definite classification of the former is imperative?"

"Absolutely. The wider range of the screen, its ability to bring the two extremes of intelligence and culture into the same picture theatre, will narrow this classification, as compared to the stage, but the need is just as actual. The screen has made good progress in teaching the lower grades of society that every rich man is not purse-proud and heartless and in disabusing the minds of the upper ten of the belief that every laboring man goes home on Saturday night and beats his wife and children. Rightly directed, the inferior intellect can be made to appreciate the better class of screen stories and shown the value of good breeding. A young fellow from the back woods was brought to Los Angeles by a friend of mine and taken into one of its best restaurants. At the end of the meal a finger bowl was placed in front of him. Instead of being perplexed, the boy dipped his fingers in the water and wiped them off on his serviette. Noticing the look of surprise on the face of his host, the young chap grinned back at him and remarked: 'You thought I wouldn't know what to do with that thing, but I do. We got a movin' picture theatre in our town an' I saw a feller use one in a picture.'"

Cecil De Mille.

Improving the Product.

"A communication has been sent to the trade papers by a well known scenario writer in which he claims that the pictures of two years ago were better than those of today—better in story and in entertainment value."

The director of "The Whispering Chorus" expressed mild surprise, as he remarked.

"I cannot see how the gentleman arrived at that conclusion. The progress the moving picture keeps making, year after year is the most hopeful sign for its future I know of. The development of its technic has been steady and rapid. To prove this to the members of our organization now in California I had the first version of 'The Squaw Man' run off for their benefit, and followed it immediately by a showing of the new version. As an object lesson it was a great success. Every branch of production exhibited great artistic gain. The development of the plot, the work of the actors and the construction of the back-grounds all helped to give the picture a firmer texture and a more pleasing design. As to the stories, we are scanning them more closely than ever and demanding quality before everything else. We recognize that scenarios, like stage plays, must be written and then rewritten.

"If a scenario writer can turn out five, or even three, high water mark scripts a year, he will be doing all that should be required of him. My father took two years to write a play. This trip to New York with my brother, William, was undertaken partly to confer with a leading playwright on an original story, which my brother and the author will adapt for the screen. I am naturally anxious to produce stories that do not follow along in the well worn channels. I am working on one at present, and I am trying to apply new methods of production that will enhance its artistic worth. Another object in coming to New York was to visit the theatres and see what the spoken drama is doing. It gives me a needed change and relaxation, and I find a comparison of the two arts instructive in both a positive and a negative sense."

"What are some of your impressions, Mr. De Mille?"

"I came across one in the New York daily press. Its lack of constructive criticism of the screen."

Bay State Exhibitors to Foregather.

The annual meeting and banquet of members of the New England branch of the Exhibitors' league will take place in Boston on the afternoon and evening of December 18. The annual meeting will start at 2 p. m. at the Hotel Lenox. The banquet will be at 6.30 p. m. at the same place.

Elaborate plans have been made. It is the first big gathering of the New England exhibitors since the ending of the war. Many members of the motion picture industry who have seen service in France and have been returned among the wounded will be special guests and may be called on.

Several well known speakers will deliver important messages to the exhibitors relating to the future of the motion picture industry.

Rambles Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

This Week's Idiotorial Directs the Attention of the Authorities to An Appalling Condition Existing On the Well Known Fifth Avenue

THE war is over. You may not know this; but it is. And our brave Soldiers, Sailors and Marines are coming home into conditions that could not obtain for a moment in President Wilson's Grand Army of the Republic. These young men will soon be parading up the Avenue of the Allies, walking up the Main Street of Fashion, perambulating along New York's Fifth Avenue.

"In the development of this noble motive, however" (we quote from a professional reviewer who recently lamped "The Narrow Path"—clearly meaning the street that passes the Office of RAMBLES) "is developing this noble motive," says the critic, every

"black and vile human trait
"such as breaking a mother's heart,
"bringing shame upon a brother,
"infidelity to a wife,
"bribery,
"deception,
"and other low and unpleasant human characteristics unfold themselves before the human eye

"as in a Fifth Avenue parade."

Just see what our soldier boys are marching into!

We have looked at a lot of parades passing under the office window, but up to yet all the things the reviewer says happen haven't caught our eye.

Perhaps we had better look again; for, clearly, we have been overlooking a lot of "heart interest" in the windy bands, crashing drums, soldiers that always "swing past" in the daily newspaper reports; in the march for sound money, preparedness and lots of other paraders.

Look-a-Here, Friend Publicist!

WE WHO fraternize in projection rooms to pass on to the printer more or less vital opinion on films call it "dope" that we ask fresh "kids" for or await patiently at the hands of mature publicists. It comes in many and various forms; sometimes, alas, not at all.

Said remarks being introduction to this praise of Theodore C. Deitrich for the very neat and effective "dope" he handed out at the showing of Doris Kenyon's "Wild Honey" the other day. It was "all there," in concise form and all essentials of author, director, scenarioist, cast and accompanying data—even to a well-composed synopsis that almost told the story the way it was screened.

Personally, we wish T. C. D. could spread himself around a bit.

Why Good Newspaper Men Are So Scarce Around Newspaper Offices

THE Union of Editors have long complained, and with right, that it is utterly impossible to keep a good man (a really good man) long on the job. After ten or fifteen years they take a "run out powder" and show up in the employ of some railroad president, film company or shining star as "personal publicist." We picture elsewhere the reason.

The pay of a reporter, critic, reviewer, editor, copy reader, office boy and other essentials to going regularly to press is handed around once a week in little envelopes; envelopes not half so large as the little sacks Congressmen use to send flower seed to their constituents who dwell in the tenement section of a great city. Our photo-engraving shows the difference when pay-day comes to a "personal publicist":

Behold Bennie Zeidman, booster for Douglas Fairbanks.

Lamp "Scoops" Conlon, whose boss is Bill Two-Gun Hart.

Gaze upon Adam Hull Shirk, representing Jesse Lasky.

See Mark Larkyn, whose other Mark is Mary Pickford.

And Jesse Lasky's other man, Kenneth McGaffey; as we present them all in a row, from left to right, with their salary in bags so heavy some of 'em can't be shouldered but must be dragged.

P. S.—That Benny Zeidman's swag rests lightly on his foot need indicate nothing more than an utter absence of corns or bunions on the hoofs of the Leaping One's Publicist.

P. P. S.—The other four space-stealers combined their strength in hoisting Mary Pickford's cash onto the shoulder of her principal Mark.

LIFE IN THE INDUSTRY.

Our Tensely Engaging Serial.

By Joseph F. Lee.

THIS is the first episode. There will be a few more. All depends upon the orders that come in from branch offices, salesmen, field managers and a few exhibitors. With this thrilling prelude, we dash into the thing without further apology.

The scene is an office in a building in Filmtown. At 9 a. m. the janitor enters, tickles the desks and chairs, puts ice in the cooler and exits for the day. At 9:30 the office boy arrives. At 10:15 "the best little stenographer you ever saw" punches the clock. At 10:45 the sales manager's secretary is on the job, proceeding to put matters in shape for the arrival of his chief, and promptly at 11:10 the Big Mogul rushed in, all out of breath.

He pushed open the door of his office, giving an approving glance at the gold letters that adorned the glass-half, "Private Office of General Sales Manager O. Fuller Bull." Out in the sticks, however, the exchange manager, salesmen and exhibitors have other names for him. (Regard for our "entry" at the post office prevents our going into details of this matter of said names.)

Mr. Bull had enjoyed a very busy evening first half of the night before entertaining a foreign buyer (from Hoboken, N. J.), using his business charms to pursuade his client to purchase the foreign rights to his company's latest superfeature, "Skipped by the Light of the Moon." This morning he felt in good spirits, as Mr. Murphinski (the foreign buyer) had told him at parting the evening before to have the contract ready for the f. b. to sign at 12 noon—just 50 minutes hence.

Rushing quickly to his job of drawing up the contract, with the aid of his secretary and "the best little stenographer you ever saw," the moments passed quickly. The force worked swiftly in silence, ultimately broken by the tinkle of the telephone bell.

Now comes conversation:

"Mr. Bull?" came the voice in rising inflection over the wire.

"Speaking," was the business like answer.

"Well, Mr. Bull, this is Mr. Murphinski —you'll remember me from last night."

"Oh, yes, indeed; the contract is all ready," said Bull, as a chill of suspicion ran down his spine.

"I've changed my mind, Mr. Bull, about closing that little deal. You remember that nice chap you introduced me to in the Astor lobby? That Mr. Silvergrabber?"

"Yes," said Bull, dejection now overcoming both his tone and spirits.

"Well, after I left you last night, he was waiting for me at my hotel. He told me he had reserved for me the Cleanfilm Photoplay production, "Poor, But Pure," and has convinced me that it's a bigger money-maker than your strip of tape—and I've signed the contract with him, just now, here in his office, from where I am speaking to you.

"Thank you for the good time you showed me last night; I never looked at a better one," were the last words to reach O. Fuller Bull's ears. Bull bit viciously at the end of a fresh La Fumeunda.

"Stung!" was a word the secretary and "t. b. l. s. y. e. s." had heard so often that they quit work on the "Skipped by the Light of the Moon" contract for foreign parts without making an additional move.

"Quite All Embracing"

Notes a friend on the margin of a Rivoli program of even date. We find the explanation:

"Overture: Symphonic Poem, "Ideals," Franz Liszt, 1811-1866; Erno Rapee conducting.

"'Ideals,' composed in 1857, was first played in Weimar the same year. It is founded on a poem by Schiller, quotations from which are printed in the score. The different sections may be entitled 'Ideals, Aspiration, Disillusion, Employment, Apotheosis.' The composer adds this note:

"'The firm adhesion to and therewith the ceaseless co-operation of the Ideal is the highest aim of life on earth. It was in the sense that I took the liberty of supplementing Schiller's poem by adding as closing apotheosis the jubilant confirmatory resumption of the motive which had occurred in the first part'."

Quite all embracing?

I'll say so!

EMERGENCY FILM DEPOTS DESIGNATED

Seattle District Exhibitors Can Now Obtain Substitutes for Pictures Delayed in Transit

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

H. G. ROSEBAUM, president of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, with offices in Seattle, announces that the list of towns for the proposed stations for keeping emergency film to prevent dark houses in the territory has been completed and the films already deposited. The list of towns follows: Aberdeen, Wash.; Baker, Ore.; Bellingham, Wash.; Billings, Mont.; Boise, Idaho; Butte, Mont.; Centralia, Wash.; Glasgow, Mont.; Eugene, Ore.; Everett, Wash.; Great Falls, Mont.; Havre, Mont.; Lewiston, Idaho; Lewistown, Mont.; Medford, Ore.; Miller City, Mont.; Yakima, Wash.; Pasco, Wash.; Pendleton, Ore.; Portland, Ore.; Spokane, Wash.; Tacoma, Wash.; Wallace, Idaho; Walla Walla, Wash.; Wenatchee, Wash.; White Fish, Mont.; Missoula, Mont.; Marshfield, Ore.; La Grande, Ore.

Mr. Rosebaum states that there is still some trouble with express deliveries, due partly to the carelessness of exhibitors and partly to the confusion existing in express company depots and offices. The hope is expressed that these emergency films will solve the problem of the exhibitors left without film by these delivery mixups.

Mike Rosenberg, president of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, returned from a business trip to San Francisco this week, where he arranged for the purchase of "My Husband's Friend," starring Frank Mills and Victoria Cross. He also bought the Northwest rights to the "Spoilers" again, this being the third time that the De Luxe Company has bought this picture.

Mr. Rosenberg will start for New York next week to further investigate the market for big features.

BIG PICTURE HOUSES FOR SOUTH BEND

Indiana City to Get Two Large Theatres, One Accommodating 2,500, the Other 3,000

Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

TWO new motion picture theatres are to be erected at South Bend, Ind., as soon as the weather becomes seasonable, if plans now under consideration are carried out.

Chicago interests have obtained a ninety-nine year lease on the property owned by the John McGill Furniture Company and the Frank Toepp Building, which adjoins it, and it is reported that they intend to build a motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of 2,500 on the site. Construction work will start early in the spring, according to present plans, with a view of having the house completed by October 1.

The other theatre project under consideration is the erection by the management of the Auditorium Theatre of a 3,000-seat hippodrome to be patterned after the Riviera in Chicago, said to be one of the most beautiful motion picture theatres in this section of the country.

George Rapp, of Chicago, who drew the plans for the Riviera, has drawn the plans for the South Bend theatre. The Messrs. Balban and Katz, owners and managers of the Central Park and Riviera theatres, are mentioned as being associated with the new hippodrome. George Hines, manager of the Auditorium Theatre, refused to confirm or deny the story regarding the Chicago partners.

"We are going to fulfill our promise to our South Bend patrons and erect a 3,000-seat hippodrome that will be a credit not only to the management, but to South Bend as well. That is all that I can say at this time," he said.

Film Entertainment for Prisoners.

Prisoners at the Indiana Reformatory, at Jeffersonville, Ind., have in prospect some good entertainment during the coming winter as a result of plans just perfected by G. H. Shideler, superintendent of the institution. Mr. Shideler, who believes that if the prisoners are kept entertained at night they will do better work and be more easily managed in the day, is going to fit up the first or second floor for the display of motion pictures. He expects to give the men a show about three times a week.

Ban on Children Hurts Exhibitors.

Motion picture exhibitors at Kokomo, Ind., missed some of their best "customers" during the period of the influenza epidemic recently as a result of the order of the city board of health, which prohibited the admission of children to theatres. Just why the health board ordered children to be kept away from the shows when figures compiled by the state health authorities show that children are not nearly as susceptible to the disease as grown-ups, was something the exhibitors could not understand.

Paramount Theatre Engages "Flu" Chaser.

During the influenza epidemic at Rochester, Ind., the management of the Paramount Theatre there employed a Rochester citizen and attired him in the uniform of a policeman to do "flu" duty in the lobby of the theatre. His duties were to see that no persons afflicted with colds got into the theatre.

Lamniotte Ill With Influenza.

L. J. Lamniotte, genial manager of the Temple Theatre, at Mishawaka, has been confined to his home for the last two weeks as a result of an attack of influenza. Physicians attending him say his condition is much improved.

LOUISVILLE THEATRES ARE PROSPERING

Peace and Almost Normal Conditions Result in Capacity Business—Leading Houses Jammed Evenings

By Ohio Valley News Servise, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

PEACE and more nearly normal conditions are resulting in a return of normal conditions with the picture theatres of Louisville, most of the exhibitors reporting excellent business, with the houses unable to begin to handle Saturday evening and Sunday business. The leading houses, which are showing the better grades of feature productions, are being jammed almost every evening, as Louisville has let loose and is again looking to be amused. In addition to the ordinary civilian business the city is drawing a big volume of business from Camp Taylor, a considerable percentage of the audience being military men.

The correspondent of the Moving Picture World caught Fred Dolle, of the Alamo Theatre, during one of his Sunday evening rushes. Mr. Dolle had a line extending out on Fourth street two buildings past the theatre, and was standing at the ticket booth in order to preserve order and prevent crowding. The lobby was jammed and only a few were being admitted at a time, but the line remained. "Some crowd you've got, Dolle," remarked the writer. "Oh, we're crowding 'em in. Got a good show to start with, but they like the Alamo. Claim it's the best house in Louisville. We're going to do some business between now and the first of the year."

At the Majestic, Walnut, Strand and other downtown theatres the same conditions were observed, only that the crowds were not lined up on the street, as was the case at the Alamo, which was showing Clara Kimball Young in "The Road Through the Dark."

Wayne to Manage the National Theatre.

Robert Wayne, formerly associated with the old Meffert Stock Company, of Louisville, and who in the past few years has been in charge of Keith houses in New York, Philadelphia and other Eastern points, arrived in the city last week to take over the active management of the National Theatre, of Louisville, a vaudeville and picture house operated by the Keith interests, which also have the Mary Anderson, a vaudeville house, and the Strand, a picture house. Mr. Wayne succeeds H. S. Carter, who went to the Mary Anderson, to succeed Carl Rettig, resigned.

Believe Fuel Can Be Had Without Trouble.

Managers of outskirts theatres who have been seriously troubled by the high price of coal and threatened shortage for a time, now believe that they will not only have no trouble in securing fuel, but that the market will go to pieces. The demand has been so dull during the past few weeks that price cutting is being done by jobbers, retailers as well as producers, in order to secure business to keep organizations together. Prices have been cut 15 to 20 cents a ton on most grades under the Government maximum prices, but promises to go much lower than this.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Levene Chafing Under Influenza Handicap.

NATE LEVENE, manager of the Mutual Exchange, Cincinnati, enthusiastic as he is over the splendid galaxy of stars now under the Mutual name, and over the new releases featuring them, has been chafing under the handicap imposed by the influenza epidemic, which, in some sections under his jurisdiction, has never for a moment died down. Some of the Kentucky towns where Mutual releases are distributed from Cincinnati have never relaxed the original ban, and the same is true of West Virginia, in part; while Columbus and several other Ohio cities were compelled to close the theatres again recently, and Cincinnati has shut out the children, indicating that the epidemic is gaining strength again. Manager Levene looks for splendid business as soon as conditions will permit, but if the approach of the holiday season finds the epidemic still holding sway he admits that it will be hard to keep cheerful.

Soldiers See "Under Four Flags."

The exhibition at the Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, during the week of December 1, of the latest and perhaps the last official war picture, "Under Four Flags," was a gala event, the fact that the war has come to a victorious conclusion lending to rather than detracting from the interest in the scenes showing troops of all of the Allied nations in action. The performances of Thursday evening of that week were featured by the attendance of a number of soldiers returned from overseas, the gold service stripe awarded for as much as six months' service abroad being the sole requirement for their admission. Boxes were given to the soldiers, and they were repeatedly applauded during the evening.

Britain Day Celebrated.

The celebration in Cincinnati of Britain Day, December 7, was arranged by a committee of the Chamber of Commerce, of which I. W. McMahan was chairman. A program for rendition on the floor of the Chamber of Commerce during the afternoon, with addresses and singing, was prepared, and in the evening a dinner at the Business Men's Club, with several prominent speakers, was largely attended.

TOO LITTLE ADVERTISING ON FEATURES

Philadelphia Exchange Representative Finds Exhibitors Do Not Give Enough Space to Big Films

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

B. R. TOLMAS, a representative of the Peerless Feature Exchange, who is well known in this territory, having been formerly manager of the Mutual Film Exchange, relates some interesting experiences concerning exhibitors who do not realize the importance of backing up big productions with the proper amount of advertising. One of their chief faults, he states, consists of waiting until the last minute to secure the proper press notices from the exchanges. In most cases the results of this rash act causes the utmost confusion in trying to hurry the advertising and also causes several mistakes to be made in the copy.

Mr. Tolmas, who praises the "Advertising for Exhibitors" department in the Moving Picture World, also stated that the profits from producing big features could be greatly increased if the exhibitors would only try and follow out the suggestions offered in these columns. "Pershing's Crusaders," "My Four Years in Germany" and some of Charlie Chaplin's comedies have already proven what can be done in this respect when backed by the proper sort of newspaper and outdoor advertising.

Among those who are recognized as leaders in motion picture publicity, both in newspaper and in outdoor work, are Abe L. Einstein, publicity director of the Stanley Company, and Charles Wanamaker, of the Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger theatres. Herbert Effinger, of the Strand and Leader theatres, is also another progressive exhibitor who believes in good advertising and who has enjoyed the excellent results derived therefrom. From up the state good results have been obtained by the Connostaga Attraction Company and George Krupa, of the Hamilton Theatre, in Lancaster, and the late Charles Oldt, of the Third Street Theatre in Easton, Pa.

Mr. Tolmas states that when the publicity departments of the film manufacturers are offering their services free to the exhibitors, and with the digested matter printed in the trade journals, there is no reason why every exhibitor cannot secure big profits from the features now being put on the market.

Individual Offices for Consolidated Exchange Heads.

Individual offices for the various heads of the many exchanges which consolidated are now housed under one roof, and have been cleverly arranged by the new plan inaugurated by the United Exchanges of Philadelphia. Several elaborate offices, finished in mahogany and up-to-date in every particular, have been provided on the first floor of the two-story building located on the southeast corner of Thirteenth and Vine street, and are occupied by William J. Heenan, general manager, of the Peerless Feature Exchange, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and the Electric Theatre Supply Company; "Bob" Lynch, manager of the Metro; George Smiley, manager of the Goldwyn, and Louis Bache, manager of the Electric Theatre Supply Company. Separate offices have also been added for the general office force, sales and shipping department and booking office. On the second floor three modern film vaults having a capacity of 21,560 reels have been installed, including a projection room equipped with two Simplex machines and having a capacity of 480 seats. Twenty-seven rewinders are busily engaged all day inspecting films. The decorating of the projection room was made under the direction of Dan Heenan, and was done in old gold and royal blue, making an attractive contrast.

Buhler Recovers from Tonsilitis.

Frank W. Buhler, managing director of all the Stanley theatres, is back at his desk again, having recovered from an attack of tonsilitis.

Select Leases Old General Building.

The Select Exchange has taken a lease on the old General Film building, 1308-10-12 Vine street, which will be occupied on or about February 1. Extensive alterations and improvements will be made.

Levy Resigns from Fox.

Jack Levy has resigned as manager of the Fox Exchange, Philadelphia, to accept the post of district manager for Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington with the United Picture Theatres of America. He will make his headquarters in Philadelphia.

Osborne New Manager at General.

A. Osborne, formerly manager of the Pathe Exchange, returned to the city last week to take charge of the General Film Exchange. Mr. Osborne left here about two years ago to manage the Pathe Exchange in Washington, from which place he finally left to manage the Pittsburgh exchange of the General. Owing to his health Mr. Osborne returned to this city.

STUDIOS PLANNED FOR SAN FRANCISCO

Balshofer Company Intends Moving Plant from Los Angeles—Lesser May Also Build Studios There

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SCARCELY a week passes but that one or more prominent producers of moving pictures visits San Francisco to investigate the proposition of erecting studios, and in several instances arrangements for sites have reached a point where it will soon be possible to make definite announcements. Most of the sites under consideration are in the vicinity of San Mateo and Burlingame, the most beautiful residence district in California, and the centre of a perfect climate belt.

Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Balshofer Feature Production Company, of Los Angeles, and H. K. Somborn, vice-president of this company, were here recently and announced their intention of moving their plant to this city. In speaking of the reasons for the change, Mr. Somborn said: "We are tired of Los Angeles. Every available scene has been 'shot' so many times that the public knows them by heart. Up here we can secure new types without number, and have access to the wonderful mountains and forests lacking in Southern California."

The claims of this city as a highly desirable location for the production of moving pictures will be laid before the leading producers of the country in the first vigorous campaign that has ever been launched to bring studios to San Francisco. Sol L. Lesser, president of the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., and one of the largest state rights buyers in the country, left a few days ago for New York with a definite proposition for the establishment of studios here. He is prepared, with wealthy associates, to erect studios in various localities around the bay, which will be sub-leased to the various companies desirous of making a change.

Tivoli Musical Director Makes Big Hit.

The Tivoli Theatre, recognized for many years before it was transformed into a moving picture house as the home of good music in this city, is keeping up the old traditions, and recent efforts along this line have created widespread interest. Manager E. M. Asher sprung a distinct surprise on the reopening of this house when he announced the engagement of Dr. Carlos DeMandil, violinist, as the musical director, with an orchestra of the latter's selection. The new director is a violin virtuoso of the first rank who has made a special study of the relation of music to moving pictures, although this is his first theatre engagement. He is a graduate of the Conservatoire of Paris, where he was awarded the gold medal and first prize, and for two years was conductor of the Astor Hotel orchestra, of New York. Upon coming to San Francisco he was made director of the St. Francis Hotel orchestra, a position he held until going to the Tivoli Theatre. He made an immediate hit at this house, and is being featured in all the publicity work.

Changes in Staff of Rialto Company.

Several changes have been made in the staff of the Rialto Theatre since the retirement of Louis R. Lurie and the reopening of the house a few weeks ago. George M. Mann, who recently took over an interest in the Rialto Theatre Company, has been chosen president, and is now devoting his entire attention to the management of this house. George Perry, formerly with the Stanley Theatres Company, Philadelphia, Pa., has succeeded J. H. Walraven as director of presentation and house manager, and is preparing to offer Rialto patrons something novel. He has organized a minstrel troupe of twelve, and this will be featured weekly as Perry's Minstrel Maids. A change in scenery, costume and in dialogue will be made each week to suggest a tour around the world. O. E. Lucas, for some time advertising manager for this house, has given way to A. Fulton Gallaspy. On the opening day of "Fame and Fortune," featuring Tom Mix, the box receipts were the second largest in the history of the house. The Government war film, "Under Four Flags," has been booked for presentation at an early date.

New Manager for Fox.

Charles Muehlman, who formerly had charge of the Denver branch of the Fox Film Corporation, has been placed in charge of the local office of this concern, succeeding William J. Citron. Mr. Muehlman is no stranger here, having been in charge of the Savoy Theatre for two seasons, and his many friends in the amusement business are glad to welcome him again. Shortly after his arrival here, Paul Mooney, the new district manager, left for Los Angeles.

Liberty Exchange Takes Over Film Stock.

The Liberty Film Exchange, owned by Nat A. Magner, has taken over the entire stock of feature pictures formerly owned by the Western Feature Film Company. Dan Markowitz, who organized the latter company, is now booker for the Fox Film Corporation.

M. & R. Exchange Adds to Stock.

The M. & R. Feature Film Exchange, 107 Golden Gate avenue, has purchased the entire holdings of the Sunset Film Corporation, including the two feature productions, "Redemption" and "The Deemster."

Theatre to Become Cafe.

The Techau Tavern Company has secured a lease on the St. Francis Theatre on Geary street, and will convert the premises into a cafe, with an entrance on Powell street. This theatre has been in the hands of several exhibitors since its opening a few years ago, but has never been a success.

Theatre Exchange to Open Branches.

Fred Frisk, manager of the United Theatre Exchange, Pacific Building, motored to Los Angeles during the recent influenza epidemic to investigate the proposition of opening a branch in that city. This will probably be done as soon as conditions there become more settled. Mr. Frisk plans to go to Seattle next month on a similar mission.

Borel Killed in Action.

Word has been received by Nat A Magner to the effect that Frank Borel, who had been in his employ for several years, had been killed in action in France on September 29. The young man was well known on film row, having served in many branches of the film business.

San Francisco Briefs.

Ralph O. Proctor, district manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., has left for Seattle, after a stay of a couple of weeks here.

The Royal Theatre on Polk street has added a large orchestra, which is conducted by Vinton LaFerrera.

A public notice has been filed to the effect that the Tam Slide Company is conducted by W. D. Tam and W. T. Porter, Jr.

WANTS SAN ANTONIO TO BE STUDIO CENTER

Chamber of Commerce of Texas City Points Out Advantages of the Territory for Picture Making

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

THE San Antonio Chamber of Commerce has started a campaign to make that city a motion picture production centre. William H. Furlong, secretary, in charge of this line of promotion work, has just returned from a trip to New York, where he presented to the large motion picture corporations the advantages of South Texas, stressing the fact that the light conditions in this territory afford a longer working day than either California or Florida. The picturesque surroundings of San Antonio, with its old Spanish missions, were also emphasized. Mr. Furlong reports that some of the producing concerns were much interested.

The latest concern to make pictures at San Antonio is the Jester Comedies Company. This company has leased the San Jose Hotel at Terrell Wells, just outside the city, and are settling down for six months' camera work during the winter. The Sunset Corporation and the Vitagraph have also been making pictures at San Antonio. The Sunset is enlarging their studios there.

Plans Films of Dallas for Its Soldiers.

An elaborate series of motion pictures of Dallas, its magnificent buildings, beautiful parks, stately homes and broad avenues is being planned by John E. Brennan, who is here from Santa Monica, Cal. Mrs. Brennan plans to send the films to be screened before the Dallas troops now in France.

Hawley Resigns from First National.

Douglas Hawley, Dallas manager of First National, has resigned his position and gone back to his first love, the publicity business. Hawley, for many years a newspaperman, received a good offer from a local advertising company and accepted it. He left First National December 2.

Manager LeRoy Bickel, of Metro, becomes manager of First National. C. E. Buchanan, formerly booking clerk, will give his full attention to Metro business. Doak Roberts, previously with the Select, who has been at Camp McArthur, Texas, will become booking clerk.

To Protest on Poor Wire Service.

Much complaint is being made by Dallas film exchange managers regarding the service given them by the telegraph companies. Plans are being made for a formal protest to Postmaster-General Burleson.

Not only are telegrams of importance to exhibitors delayed, but sometimes they go entirely astray, causing business losses and closed theatres because of nondelivery of film.

Telegraph companies in this territory say that they are handicapped owing to difficulty in securing delivery boys and skilled operators, who are either in the army or in war work.

The film exchanges still continue to complain about the express company service, which, they say, is slowly getting worse.

Sunday Shows Have Proved Their Worth.

The presence of army camps in many of the larger towns of Texas has caused the motion picture theatres to keep open on Sundays during the past eight months or a year. Now that troops are to be demobilized and many camps abolished it appears likely that there will be no return to the old blue laws.

Fort Worth, a typical example, kept its theatres closed Sundays until the authorities at Camp Bowie urged their opening as affording helpful recreation to the 30,000 troops of the Thirty-sixth Division quartered there. The theatres were then permitted to open on Sunday, and have stayed open ever since. It is likely that they will continue to do so since the Sunday show has proved itself a force for good in the community.

Dallas has, with the exception of a brief period four years ago, always had Sunday shows and consequently will not be affected.

Celebrates Fifth Anniversary.

The Washington Theatre celebrated its fifth anniversary on Thanksgiving Day, and W. D. Neville, owner, and Louis Bissinger, manager, received many congratulations from their friends and patrons. The Washington, which opened its doors on Thanksgiving Day, 1913, was the first elaborate downtown motion picture theatre to be opened in Dallas.

Liberty Theatre, Beaumont, Opens.

The new Liberty Theatre, at Beaumont, Texas, was opened late in November by the Jefferson Amusement Company. A heavy downpour of rain did not dampen the enthusiasm of the initial audience which crowded the beautiful $50,000 structure, which seats 1,800 persons.

Airdome Converted Into Closed Theatre.

The Airdome Theatre, owned by Flippen & Co., at Ranger, Texas, has been roofed in and converted into an all-the-year-round motion picture play house.

Texas Brevities.

The Princess Theatre, at Eastland, Texas, a town in the West Texas oil belt, opened during the last week of November. This $25,000 motion picture theatre was constructed by Ball and Barry, of Kansas, who own several motion picture houses in that state.

Sporadic outbreaks of influenza have caused the closing of motion picture theatres in several small West Texas towns. These include Paducah, Ralls and Tulia. Very few theatres are closed, however, through the Southwestern territory, and business is reported as being good.

Maritime Provinces News

By Alice Fairweather, Standard, St. John, New Brunswick.

Business Picking Up in St. John.

IT is a question as to whether the motion picture business in St. John has as yet regained its normal footing. The attendance at the theatres is getting much larger than it was just after the opening of the houses, but some timid persons who were formerly constant attendants at the theatres, have not yet taken up the habit, fearing a recurrence of the epidemic. All houses in St. John and Halifax are open, but throughout the province there are several places where the ban still remains in force.

Ushers Presented to Governor General.

The Imperial Theatre was the scene of a brilliant gathering recently when an afternoon reception was held for the Duke of Devonshire in order that he might address the representatives of Women's patriotic societies. Mayor Hayes presided, and the theatre was prettily decorated, the stage setting in a drawing-room effect with palms and flowers displayed. Presidents of the societies sat in the left-hand box, and the St. John correspondent of the Moving Picture World was honored by being invited (with another woman journalist) to represent the women of the Press. Volunteer aid workers sat in another box, and after they had been presented to the Duke the white-clad ushers of the Young Women's Patriotic Association went up, twelve of them, and those present applauded heartily.

Exchange Managers' Body to Meet.

A meeting of the Exchange Managers' Association is to be held on Monday, which is their regular meeting day, but at this meeting the exhibitors are also to be invited to be present to discuss matters of interest to all, the question of prepayment, which is the most serious one at the moment.

NEWMAN BUILDING $500,000 THEATRE

Many Features Will Distinguish the New House—Work Being Rushed for Early Spring Opening

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

FRANK L. NEWMAN, president of the Newman Theatre Company, owners of the Royal and Regent theatres, is pushing rapidly the construction of his third enterprise, to be known as the Newman Theatre. This will occupy 100 feet frontage, 127 feet deep, on Main street, between Eleventh and Twelfth. The Newman Theatre will be a few doors from the Liberty.

This enterprise will have numerous features that will distinguish it among amusement projects. While strictly a moving picture theatre, it is being built somewhat after the plan of a speaking-stage structure. The building will be five stories high, but only the ground floor front will contain any other business than the theatre, and here high-class stores will be opened. The building, with equipment, will represent an expenditure of about half a million dollars.

It is expected that the opening will occur early in spring. Work is being done on Sundays and holidays, and foundations are now rising. On a large sign at the site of the building is the statement indicating that the Newman Theatre Company, with the Royal, Regent, and the new theatre, will have an investment in these enterprises in Kansas City of $2,000,000. The sign helps greatly to give the public a conception of the amount of money being used for its entertainment in the moving picture industry.

Exhibitors Receive Recognition.

Exhibitors in Kansas City are getting this tangible result from their undaunted fight against discriminating regulations during the influenza ban: They are being recognized as a definite factor in civic life. Recently there was held a mass meeting of citizens for the purpose of deciding on a plan for a memorial for the Kansas City soldiers who died in the war.

Several civic bodies were asked to send delegates to this meeting, and the Exhibitors' League was also invited. W. B. Tuteur, Frank L. Newman and N. J. Flynn were the representatives appointed to attend the meeting. They secured the assistance of A. L. Cooper, former state senator, one of the leading attorneys of the city, to present their suggestions, and speak for them at the meeting; and Mr. Cooper took a prominent part in it.

In future consideration of the type of memorial that will be established the moving picture industry will have a part. This is particularly important since already the suggestion has been made that whatever memorial is decided upon, there should be some definite method of preserving historical records of Kansas City's Boys' part in the war—and moving pictures may provide one means of doing this.

A. H. Blank Opens Kansas City Branch.

L. D. Balsly has joined the A. H. Blank Enterprises, and has opened a separate branch of that organization in Kansas City, for serving Kansas. This announcement is of interest to exhibitors, both because it indicates the growth of the A. H. Blank business in this territory, necessitating the opening of a branch office, and because Mr. Balsly is so widely known among them.

Mr. Balsly has been in many departments of the film business, therefore having a breadth of experience that fitted him well for the new task. He organized the Aladdin Theatre Company at Springfield, Mo., and operated that theatre, after leaving the International Harvester Company, with whose advertising department he had been connected many years. He later joined A. D. Flintom's organization in Kansas City, as advertising manager, and proved his talent in producing advertising helps for exchange and exhibitor. He was also manager of the Kansas City Metro Exchange.

C. E. Holah, general manager of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, was in Kansas City November 30, installing Mr. Balsly in the branch of which he will have full charge. The A. H. Blank Enterprises has the franchises for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas.

Elected President of Co-operative Club.

Seymour Rice, former actor, later theatre manager in Kansas City, now publisher of theatre programs, was recently elected president of the Co-operative Club. Mr. Rice is—as might be guessed from his election—a real worker in organizations; and the honoring of him by the Co-operative Club is a source of gratification to the moving picture industry, as well as to other phases of the amusement business. With the moving picture men co-operating heartily now with other theatrical interests and an association being formed, it is expected that important advances will be made in Kansas City towards elevating the public conception of the dignity of the business.

Film Men in Commercial Clubs.

"The film industry, both exhibitors and exchange men, ought to take their proper places in the biggest local commercial organization."

This statement by J. E. Storey, manager of the Pathe office at Kansas City, was indorsed by other film men at a recent meeting of the industry. The recent unfortunate happenings in connection with the influenza epidemic were blamed by Mr. Storey largely to the fact that film men had not been more active in the Chamber of Commerce.

"We should belong to the Chamber, take part in their meetings, know what is going on in the organization, give it the benefit of our specialized information on the industry, and so really help the Chamber to work out correct solutions of problems in which our industry is involved," he said. "We can do a whole lot more with the Chamber on the inside than we can on the outside."

Mr. Storey related the facts as to the declaration of the ban on public gatherings, and other regulations of the epidemic, which the Chamber of Commerce claimed, in a special announcement to members, it had been responsible for. He had pointed out to officers of the Chamber that they had disregarded entirely the point of view of film men in such action—and the officers had come back with their suggestion that the film men ought to make themselves more available as sources of information on subjects affecting the moving picture industry.

"You can perform a real service to the city and the Chamber," said Cliff C. Jones, vice-president of the Chamber and head of its civics department. "We need you in the organization—we want your co-operation—and you ought to demonstrate by your presence and participation the standing of your industry, which is fifth in the United States among all industries."

Musicians secure employment and managers are provided with competent orchestras or piano players through The World's Classified Advertising Department.

The small advertisement is not to be despised—especially when it is an announcement in The World's Classified Advertising Department.

WEEK'S DIGEST OF NEWS FROM DAYTON

Business With Picture Houses Generally Continues Brisk—"Under Four Flags" at the Strand

By Paul J. Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

THE reported good business at Dayton picture theatres is holding up in good shape and the Sunday openings, December 1, were the kind that speak for a continuance of prosperity. The Strand opened Sunday with "Sporting Life," the much heralded Tourneur made companion to "The Whip." Business at that house was very good for the day, although it did not reach the mark set by Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" the previous Sunday. "Theda Bara," in the "She Devil," opened at the Columbia for four days to packed houses. The Dayton Theatre (always packed) opened with this house's favorite star, Mabel Normand, in her latest, "A Perfect 36." The Government Official War picture, "Under Four Flags," opened at the Strand for four days Sunday, December 8. It is getting more than the usual amount of "free" publicity in the Dayton dailies.

Mecca, One of Dayton's West Side Houses.

A man who plays an important part in all phases of life in Dayton's "west side," where a good many foreigners (now true Americans) live, is Julius Leopold, manager and owner of the Mecca Theatre, and also lessee of the Midget Theatre, in the same section, about two blocks away. Considering the fact that his is a neighborhood house, Mr. Leopold has a very attractive theatre in the Mecca, of which one view is given on this page.

In spite of the fact that many of his patrons are so-called foreigners (although now patriotic Americans), Mr. Leopold states that more enthusiasm was shown during the run of "America's Answer" recently at the Mecca than is usually displayed. This film played for one week at the Memorial Hall, Dayton, first run. After this Managing Director Mark Gates, of the Dayton Theatre here, played the film for four days to packed houses. This did not daunt Mr. Leopold, however, for he started with an engagement of "America's Answer" the day after the Dayton Theatre engagement, which is a big downtown house drawing from the whole city, with a seating capacity of 2,500.

The writer happened to be a visitor at the Mecca during a showing of this film, and to say that the crowd was enthusiastic would be to put it mildly. They were cheering wildly at every scene and patriotism reigned supreme. The seating capacity of the Mecca is about 500, there being only one other suburban house in Dayton larger. Mr. Leopold states that business is fine at the Mecca, also the Midget, which he controls, and that nothing more could be wished for. WALKER, who operates theatres in Aberdeen and other South Dakota points, has taken a lease on the Princess Theatre in Fort Dodge, and is running high class feature half the week and vaudeville the other half. ELABORATE TABLEAU FOR OFFICIAL FILM

Original and Effective Spectacle Staged at the Circle, Indianapolis, for "Under Four Flags"

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

WITH a gifted orchestral interpretation and an appropriate and elaborately staged tableau called "The Pageant of the Allies," giving it both voice and color, the official Government war picture, "Under Four Flags," shown last week at the Circle Theatre in Indianapolis, was no doubt a bigger success than any other war picture that has been presented in the Hoosier capitol.

But there is no doubt that it was the showmanship of S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle, who was responsible for the tableau, and Ernesto Natiello, the director of the Circle orchestra, that contributed largely to the picture's success in Indianapolis.

Untiringly and apparently without regard to expense Mr. McCormick arranged a tableau for the opening of the picture which, for originality and effectiveness, surpassed any of his previous spectacles.

In the background was a scene from "No Man's Land," whereon lay Gerald Gardner, soloist, who opened the tableau by reciting "In Flanders Fields." Attired in a stained and dusty uniform, he convincingly acted the part of a wounded American soldier. During a ballet by a number of flag-bearing young women, Mr. Gardner sang "Mother Machree."

The culmination of the tableau showed the audience the world surmounted by the Goddess of Liberty and engirdled by the flags of the allied nations. With the presentation of this part of the tableau the audience arose and sang the "Star Spangled Banner." All of the music for the tableau was arranged by Ernesto Natiello.

INTEREST IN EDUCATIONAL FILMS GROWS

Marked Evidence in Minneapolis That Pictures of an Instructive Nature Are Gaining in Popularity

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

THE growth in the popularity of moving pictures of an educational, social, economic and patriotic value, as well as those of a merely entertaining character, has been marked in Minneapolis during the past year. It was clearly shown by the interest taken in recent pictures of that nature and is emphasized by renewed interest which attaches to certain exhibitions slated for December.

One of the events of the month will be the visit of Ralph D. Paine, author of "Our Fighting Fleet," who was with the Allied naval expeditions for a year. He will give an illustrated lecture in the Minneapolis auditorium December 7, for Monument Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, presenting the first official moving pictures of the Allied fleets in the North sea. A musical program is planned. The proceeds of the lecture will go toward a fund for insuring the perpetuation of the flag at the Gateway of Minneapolis.

Moving pictures will be a feature at the most ambitious social event of the month, a Peace Carnival, to be given Saturday afternoon and evening, December 14, as the formal opening event of the Berkeley Club of the Women's Christian Association. The Berkeley Club is a club home for young business women and students. It was taken over by the Y. W. C. A. last sprang, and, after several months of remodeling, it now houses its full quota of young women.

In addition to the pictures, there will be dancing, bowling and music. The dining room will be temporarily converted into a concert hall, with a stage, spotlight and screen.

E. J. Longyear will show pictures of the Y. M. C. A. camp at Green Lake, taken last summer. In it are many Minneapolis boys. The Clio Club's Annual Lawn Fete, at one of the beautiful Lake Minnetonka country homes, will also be shown in the films. One reel will show the Ambulance Training Camp at Allentown, Pa., where 5,000 college boys learned to drill, carry stretchers, rescue wounded, do first aid, etc. Philip Longyear, son of E. J. Longyear, and David Shearer are among the Minneapolis boys in the groups.

A pantomime playlet will be staged, and soldiers who have returned from the front will give informal talks.

Under orders of Surgeon-General Rubert Blue, of the United States Public Health Service, to continue the education campaign against vice diseases, Dr. H. G. Irving, director of the State Board of Health Division of Venereal Diseases, gave exhibitions of the special moving picture film, "Fit to Fight," free to men of draft age, in high school auditoriums in Minneapolis during the last week of November and the first part of December. Great interest was shown in these films when they were screened at the five high schools of this city.

Film Men Aid War Chest Drive.

Minneapolis moving picture men, who have long since proven themselves to be generous patriots, are again digging deep in their pockets and helping to fill to overflowing the 1919 War Chest.

In the Minneapolis War Chest campaign, which began December 1, it is proposed to raise during one week $4,000,000 in behalf of the American soldiers and sailors and the helpless civilian victims of the war.

This campaign, including as it does the local charities, which have loaned their machinery to the war organizations during the days of hostilities, will in one stroke relieve the citizens of the community of their 1919 obligations to war relief and local welfare and charity work.

"America's Answer," the second official war picture, began a run of one week at the New Lyric Theatre, December 1, and all of the proceeds above the actual expense of presentation will go to the city's War Chest Fund. This generous gift will be made under special arrangements with Ruben & Finkelstein, New Lyric owners. Large audiences attended the first showings of the picture here, and all indications pointed to a handsome return for the War Chest.

In addition to making personal contributions many exhibitors have been showing slides boosting the War Chest campaign.

United and General Move.

General Film Company has leased large new quarters on the fourth floor of the Loeb Arcade in Minneapolis, and will move into the new offices this month, according to Manager Michel. David G. Rogers, manager of the United Picture theatres in Minneapolis, will be located in the same quarters with the General Exchange.

In Unsigned Advertisements Winnipeg Theatres Proclaim Lifting of Ban and Resumption of Business

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

PICTURE houses in Winnipeg, Manitoba, reopened on Thursday, November 28, after seven weeks of idleness, with a loud bang, literally speaking. Page space in both the Winnipeg Telegram and the Winnipeg Evening Tribune was used to produce the spectacular report. The "copy" used in these large spreads was both charaeteristic and appropriate.

"Good-bye Flu—We're Through with You," was the big heading on the special page in the Tribune, and then comes the announcement that the ban on theatres has been raised by the health authorities. "Cheer Up, Public," reads the advertisement. "It's safe, absolutely safe, to see your favorite hero or heroine screened from Thursday on. Theatres glisten with cleanliness. They've been scrubbed, scoured, disinfected, renovated, cleaned, and every crook and cranny ventilated and temperatured. Safer—Cleaner—Better than ever. New Attractions. New Features. New Talent. Come on down, Father, Mother, Sister, Brother. Feed that starved movie appetite with the Best in Filmdom."

The advertisement in the Telegram follows another strain of thought.

"Kamerad! The Flu Has Quit," shouts the Telegram announcement. Then follows the statement that the theatres reopen on November 28. "It will be a case of 'all star' bills for some weeks to come. Throw care to the winds—Go to your favorite theatre. Every sanitary precaution has been taken."

These advertisements were eye-openers in every sense of the word. The name of no theatre appears in the space, the regular announcements of the local houses appearing on other pages of the papers.

Exhibitors Buying Much New Equipment.

George McArthur, special representative of the Perkins Electric Company, Montreal, Canadian distributors of Power's, Simplex and Motiograph projection machines and other theatre equipment, has just returned from the Canadian West, where he spent four months in calling on exhibitors. Despite the epidemic, McArthur succeeded in selling a considerable quantity of machines, transverters, screens and other goods. During the trip he sold over thirty new gold fiber screens. In Vancouver he sold two new Simplex projectors to the Colonial Theatre, while the Rex Theatre ordered two new Simplex machines as well. The Colonial also installed two Power's machines. He sold 5,000 Speer carbons in Vancouver. This is an indication of the manner in which western exhibitors are buying new equipment.

For the new Allen Theatres at Edmonton and Regina, Power's Cameragraphs and Hertner Transverters have been ordered.

Mr. McArthur reports that M. Sherman, of Moose Jaw, Sask., is also building a new theatre in Regina, Sask.

McIntosh Goes to Fox Film.

Lester McIntosh, for several years with Allfeatures, Ltd., Toronto, and for the past year the manager of the General's Toronto branch, has become special representative of the Fox Film Company's Toronto branch.

New Theatres for Ottawa.

Ottawa, the Canadian capital, is going to have almost a new assortment of theatres, if present reports are correct. Several sites around the city are pointed out as the locations of picture houses. Some of these sites have apparently been "held" since before the war. What lends color to the reports, however, is the fact that a representative of Marcus Loew has been visiting the city. Announcement was also made a few months ago, too, that both Ottawa and Kingston would probably have new Loew theatres just as soon as building restrictions were lifted by the Government. The main restriction, in this respect, was a prohibition of the use of steel.

No Change in Personnel of Mutual.

So far as Canada is concerned there will be no change in the personnel of the Mutual-Affiliated organization, according to an announcement made at Toronto. James Travis, of Toronto, will continue as Eastern Canadian manager of the company, with headquarters at Toronto. Ray Peck will continue as Montreal manager and C. H. Kerr as manager of the branch at St. John, N. B.

Women's Club Criticises Vaudeville.

The Ottawa Women's Club, in session in the Y. W. C. A. Hall on Thursday, November 28, severely criticised the local theatres which are showing vaudeville for the class of acts which are being presented. The fine point of the matter is that the club had no criticism to offer regarding the moving pictures which are being screened in local houses. The vaudeville was "rough" in spots, to say the least, it was asserted.

A resolution introduced by Mrs. F. Devine, which was unanimously supported, requested local managers to improve the standard of the acts. Mrs. Devine also mentioned in passing, that eventually the authorities will be approached with a request for the censorship of vaudeville offerings throughout Canada in a manner similar to the examination of imported and Canadian films.

Toronto Has a "Repeat Week."

The week of December 2 was unofficially designated as "Repeat Week" in moving picture circles of Toronto, Ont. The three principal downtown theatres found it necessary to repeat attractions during that period which had been shown during the previous week. These features included Chaplin's 'Shoulder Arms" at the Strand and Regent theatres, while the Allen Theatre booked "The Better 'Ole" for a second week because of the enormous crowds which flocked to the house during the first week's showing.

Manager Elliott, of the Regent Theatre, announced that 42,683 people had paid admissions to see "Shoulder Arms" during the six days of the week of November 25. This makes an average daily attendance at the Regent for the week of slightly more than 7,000 persons. This means that the Regent was filled to capacity five times each day.

The English war picture, "The Better 'Ole," proved to be a surprisingly good drawing card at the Allen. Regular prices were charged, general admissions for evening performances being 25 cents and 35 cents.

Trade Showing of Pathe Serial in Ottawa.

There was a gathering of several hundred exhibitors, reviewers, newspapermen, fans and others at the Family Theatre, Ottawa, on Wednesday evening, November 27, for the presentation of the first three episodes of the Pathe serial, "Wolves of Kultur." The show was arranged by Charles Lalumiere, representing the Montreal headquarters of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Canadian Pathe distributors. It was the first local trade show in months. Lalumiere had no difficulty in placing the first run in Ottawa, Managing Bureau of the Francais Theatre getting the picture.

Majestic Holds a Midnight Show.

The Majestic Theatre, Winnipeg, Man., put over a good stunt when the ban was raised at midnight, November 27. The management of the Majestic did not wait until the afternoon of the 28th to stage his first performance, but opened the doors of the theatre at one minute past midnight with a special show, the feature of which was "Fires of Youth," starring Ruth Clifford. The performance was described as "a treat for Winnipeg's starved photoplay fans." Although the idea of a midnight show was something entirely new for Winnipeg, the attendance was good and the theatre secured a wide amount of publicity.

Tax Receipts Distributed Among Hospitals.

The City Commissioners of Montreal received on November 23 the sum of $70,362.90 from the Quebec provincial government as a part of the allotment for the year from the provincial amusement tax. The city immediately distributed this money, pro rata, among a dozen different hospitals and homes in Montreal, the largest sum, $9,413, being awarded to the Montreal General Hospital.

Uses Timely Slogans in Theatre Ads.

Manager Sexton, of the Family Theatre, Kew Beach, Toronto, has adopted several timely slogans for use in his theatre advertising. One slogan consists of an appeal to "Save coal and spend your evenings at the Family Theatre." Another line is, "The Family Theatre is well heated and ventilated."

Detroit News Letter

By Jacob Smith, 117 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

THE opening on Thanksgiving Eve of the Regent Theatre in Battle Creek, Mich, was a gala event, and Lipp & Cross deserve the highest praise for giving the Food City such a magnificent playhouse. Although the first show was scheduled to start at 7 p. m., there was a line-up of people at the box office as early as 6 o'clock. The elite of Battle Creek were in attendance, and it resembled the first night at the Metropolitan Opera. The opening attractions were Italy's "Flaming Front" and Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," both First National. Flowers from friends and telegrams of congratulations were in abundance, and, as a special treat, telegrams were received from Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Olga Petrova and Anita Stewart, all wishing Lipp & Cross great success. When these wires were read from the stage they brought heavy applause.

Among the film men who personally attended were Ed. Beatty, Harry Scott and Harlann Starr, of the Madison Film Exchange, and Harry Angell, of the World. There would have been a special trainload from Detroit had it not been Thanksgiving Eve, when so many of the boys had arranged to be home for Thanksgiving. Each box of the new Regent is named after some famous film star. A full description of this new house will be published in an early issue.

McGee Resigns from Majestic Theatre.

M. W. McGee, who has been managing director of the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, nearly four years, and who supervised the building five months prior to its opening, has tendered his resignation to take effect January 1. Mr. McGee has no announcement to make as to future plans, although he has several attractive offers both in and out of town which he is considering.

Mr. McGee is one of the most wide-awake managers in the country. "Mac" understands every phase of the show business, and is particularly adapted to the picture industry, having been in the producing end. His success has been due to the fact that he makes each week one of individuality; he studies every picture from all angles to get the most out of them in the ways of special stunts, advertising and publicity.

New Exchange Ready.

W. A. Haynes has now started business at 303 Film Building, Detroit, as Michigan representative for the Film Clearing House and the Independent Sales Corporation. The first named concern does the physical distribution only for any producer who desires such service. The latter concern will sell and distribute the $10, $20 and $30 pictures, the first of which is "Her Mistake," and which goes into the Colonial Theatre for a solid week. Mr. Haynes will shortly announce the first twelve pictures to be released.

Educational's Pictures Going Strong.

Charles A. Dean, president of the Educational Distributing Corporation, visited Detroit again last week, and was amazed in visiting the first-run theatres to note so many Educational subjects. "Exhibitors all over the country are realizing the value of Educational subjects, and adding them to their program," he said. "In the smallest towns exhibitors are booking them, and with splendid success." Harry Abbott is the Detroit manager for Educationals.

Fox Gets the Washington.

When W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, was in Detroit, November 30, he confirmed the rumor that William Fox had leased the Washington Theatre, Detroit, taking possession at the expiration of John H. Kunsky's lease, which is September, 1919. Mr. Fox is paying $45,000 per annum, in addition to the taxes, which will bring the grand total up to about $52,000.

FILM SMILES SPEEDING "OVER THERE"

Maryland Soldiers in France Soon to Get 15,000 Feet of Pictures of Their Relatives and Friends

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

THE 15,000 feet of film taken and produced under arrangements made by the Sun and the Evening Sun, of Baltimore, of the smiling relatives and friends of the boys from Baltimore and Maryland in the war on the other side have been placed on board a ship and are on their way to France. They are entitled "Miles of Smiles," and that is indeed what they are.

The men who undertook the work of getting the people together and producing the pictures were J. E. Murphy, news editor; E. A. Fitzpatrick, city editor, and John Shea, of the staff of the Evening Sun.

For the past several weeks these men have worked unceasingly in relays in an effort to make the pictures a success. Several moving picture men from New York were engaged to do the camera work and directing and the producing of the film.

The films show the well known men in Baltimore's civil life, those of the Sun staff who have prominent positions and others in groups. Then other reels include the relatives and friends of the boys, who gathered in various sections of the city and state at scheduled times to smile before the clicking camera.

When the pictures were completed the people in the different sections of the city were given opportunities to see themselves as the boys over there will see them, and then they were taken around the state, being booked in various theatres. The proceeds of the performances thus given, or a proportion of the money taken in, went to the benefit of the United War Work Campaign.

It is expected that the pictures will arrive in France about December 15, and the Maryland soldiers, according to the present plans, will see them before Christmas. All men in the navy or army branch of the service will get a chance to see the films if it is possible, for the plans call for showing them in the army organizations and in the naval bases where Maryland boys are located. The Seventy-ninth and Twenty-ninth Division men are booked first on the program, and the 117th Trench Mortar Battery and the Forty-second or Rainbow Division next.

Cupero, director of the orchestra at the New Theatre, 210 West Lexington street, directed the music in the big benefit performance given by the South plan employes of the Bartlett-Hayward Company at the Lyric on Wednesday night, November 27. This is understood to be the first picture of a series to be produced by the Catholic Art Association.

The affair was given under fashionable auspices, the arrangements being made by Miss Constance Brady, chairman, assisted by Mrs. W. O. Stevens.

Special Pictures Taken.

Dressed in French uniforms and equipment, a platoon of about thirty men, all foreign born, but not one Frenchman in the lot, posed especially for moving pictures. This platoon went to a part of the grounds of Camp Meade on Tuesday, November 26, which had the appearance of "Somewhere in France," and played a game of baseball. The directing was done by John McCutcheon. The agents of the Committee on Public Information arranged for the uniforms and equipment needed.

Fannie Ward Heads Pathe Program December 15

THE Pathe program for the week beginning December 15 is headed by Fannie Ward in another of her extra selected star photoplays made from the play, "The Narrow Path," under the management of A. H. Woods, who is also the producer of the picture. It is said to be an exceptionally strong story of New York life. George Fitzmaurice directed the subject for Astra. The keynote is expressed in one of the subtitles: "God never planned a double standard—one for a man and another for a woman. And, yet, in the eyes of the world, a woman always must pay."

Harold Lloyd, with his able and active assistants, Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard, appears in an unusual Rolin-made comedy, called "Take a Chance." The comedian was not slow to accept the invitation, and how he managed to escape broken bones in some of the stunts that he accomplishes is a mystery.

The entire history of war as it affected America up to the time of peace is told in a special one-reel patriotic feature, called "Liberty's Triumph." It has been aptly called "The Condensation of a Thousand Books."

The tenth episode of "Wolves of Kultur" is called "When a Woman Wars," and shows how a clever, wideawake and patriotic girl outwits the German only to face another peril. Leah Baird is given splendid support by Sheldon Lewis, Charles Hutchison and Edmund Dalby.

Number 25 of the Official War Review shows some of the most vivid scenes of the conduct of the great war that has yet been exhibited. The head-hunting Dyaks, the firce savage men of Borneo, become closely familiar with the camera in Post Travel Series No. 25, and they make an entirely odd and interesting study. Those who have seen "The Wild Men of Borneo" of the circus will be surprised when they see what really super-freaks the real, "blood-drinking" originals are.

The scenario for the production was written by Charles Whittaker and Evangeline Booth, Commander of the Salvation Army, personally appears in a number of the scenes.

Lockwood's Death Brings Heavy Call for His Work

THE question as to whether the death of a star would affect the popularity of his picture productions seems to have been settled for all time by the case of the late Harold Lockwood, the first player of prominence to die at the height of his career in many months.

Not only is the photoplay work of the young actor in greater demand than ever, but his admirers are flooding the offices of Metro with requests for the reissuing of Lockwood favorites. The greatest interest, however, lies in the seven-reel super-features Mr. Lookwood completed for Screen Classics, Inc., shortly before his death.

"Pals First," the first of these to be distributed by Metro, is enjoying unprecedented runs in the largest theatres. The story won admiration first as a book and then as a play, running for over a year to capacity business on Broadway. The picture was directed by Edwin Carewe.

E. M. Sanders, special representative of Screen Classics, who handled the record-breaking bookings, attributes the increased demand on the part of exhibitors and the public for Harold Lockwood productions not only to the popularity and ability of the star and the unusual quality of his productions, but to the fact that his death has aroused interest in his work.

"Mr. Lockwood's pictures," Mr. Sanders declares, "are the story of his vigorous career. Naturally his friends and others are interested and in turn the exhibitor is interested. 'Pals First,' already familiar as a delightful tale of mystery, charm and action, makes a superb and absorbing screen story. It represents the star at the zenith of his success. From the letters of exhibitors we have, his other pictures, which will be released soon, will be even more popular."

The first of these will probably be "The Great Romance." It is written around the timely subject of democracy. Mr. Lockwood's role is that of a young king who renounces his throne to institute a popular form of government in his native land. The love interest is between the heir to the throne and an American girl.

Good Cast for "A Lady's Name."

Select has made public the personnel of Constance Talmadge's next Select picture, "A Lady's Name," in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick. "A Lady's Name" will be remembered as the successful stage play by Cyril Harcourt, in which Marie Tempest was starred, and in which the author and Norma Trevor were featured players. This picture was announced last week, but it was impossible at that time to give the complete cast.

In "A Lady's Name," Constance Talmadge heads a company that is said to be superior in many ways to the original cast that presented this comedy on the stage. Harrison Ford is leading man.

There is an unusually large cast. Director Walter Edwards has included in it Emory Johnson, Vera Doria, James Farley, Fred Huntley, John Steppling, Truman Van Dyke, Lillian Leighton, Emma Gerdes and Zazu Pitts.

Miss Mersereau Is "The Nature Girl."

Scenes on a tropical island near the equator, the filming of which cost Universal more than $5,000, are features of "The Nature Girl," the Bluebird picture which will soon be released. Violet Mersereau, star of the production, is pictured in the bewitching role of a girl reared in scant clothing and mid scenes close to nature. O. A. C. Lund directed the film.

"Little Miss Hoover" (Paramount). Gloria Swanson, Star of "Don't Change Your Husband" (Artcraft). "The Hope Chest" (New Art Film).

Pauline Frederick Working on First Goldwyn Subject

PAULINE FREDERICK is rapidly progressing on her first Goldwyn picture at the Biograph studio in the Bronx, under the direction of Hobart Henley. Not the least interesting feature for those who have been watching Miss Frederick's company at work is the close collaboration of Willard Mack. Nobody, of course, knows Miss Frederick's style better than Mr. Mack, and nobody could be better equipped to assist a director in getting the fullest screen values out of her skill and personality. Mr. Mack has assisted in the building of the scenario. Furthermore, he is acting one of the most important roles in the play.

The cast has been selected with the utmost care. It includes Ben Hendricks, Fred Lennox, Jere Austin and Tammany Young. Prominent on the distaff side is Florence Ashbrooke.

The play, of which the title and authorship are not yet disclosed, will be a distinct surprise. It is founded upon one of the best known attractions that the Broadway theatres had to offer this year.

"Little Women" Release Is Set for Jan. 15.

"Little Women," the William A. Brady production, based upon Louise M. Alcott's story of New England life, purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation immediately after its successful showing at the Strand Theatre, will be released as Paramount-Artcraft Special January 5.

Filled with humor, pathos and delicate sentiment, this delightful pictured version of the adventures of Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy, the Famous Players-Lasky officials contend, will attract to the theatres every woman and girl, and every man and boy, for that matter, who have read the story.

The story is a lavender-scented picture of New England during the days of the Civil War, and its numerous home touches, its bits of romance and its gentle pathos are said to be as effective in the photoplay as they were in the pages of Miss Alcott's wonderful book.

Of added historical interest is the fact that the scenes in the photoplay were filmed in and about the home of Miss Alcott in Concord, Mass., which is in a perfect state of preservation. Assisting in the details of production was a nephew of the author, who gave many valuable pointers to Harley Knoles, the director. In the cast as the four little women are Isabel Lamon, Dorothy Bernard, Lillian Hall and Florence Flinn. Henry Hull is Brooke and Conrad Nagel is Laurie. Kate Lester, Julia Hurley, George Kelson and Lynn Hammond are also in the cast.

Fox Releases "The Strange Woman."

"The Strange Woman," the film version of the play by William J. Hurlburt, was released last week by William Fox, with Gladys Brockwell in the title role. An interesting point in connection with the release of "The Strange Woman" is that this picture was among those chosen to be shown to the presidential peace conference party on the voyage to France. The subject was directed by Edward J. Le Saint. The scenario was written by J. Grubb Alexander.

In the cast supporting Miss Brockwell are Charles Clary, William Scott, Harry Depp, Ruby LaFayette G. Raymond Nye, Ada Beecher, Eunice Moore, Grace Wood, Margaret Cullington, Lucy Donahue, Miss Billy Armst, William Hutchinson, Miss Gerard Grassby and Louis Fitzroy.

The story of "The Strange Woman" revolves around the exposure of the hypocrisy of a small-town population by a brilliant woman of the world who at first is regarded as an adventuress. The town of Delphi, Iowa, is provincial to a degree, and contains the diversified types invariably found in such communities.

World to Release "The Better 'Ole" as Special

A BIG winner falls into the lap of World Pictures—"The Better 'Ole." The most unusual occurrence connected with the moving picture industry is recorded in the simultaneous presentation of a big theatrical success concurrent with the release of the same subject in a picture production.

This situation happens with the hit of this season in "The Better 'Ole," now playing at the Cort Theatre, New York City—which, by the way, did over $14,000 gross business for the week ending December 2. Although the play has been seen in this country less than two months, so great is its success that three companies are now being formed to tour the country. It was written by Bruce Bairnsfather, the celebrated English soldier cartoonist, whose efforts have been exploited in a great number of daily American newspapers and the more prominent of the illustrated weeklies.

"The Better 'Ole" has been running in London for over a year, and the vogue attained there had won for it no little fame before an American producer secured the playing rights for this country. World Pictures will release a picture version of "The Better 'Ole," which is in seven reels, as a special.

The picture derives its queer name from a spoken title, where one of the characters, lying in a shell hole under bombardment, replying to another, says: "If you do not like this 'ole find a better one."

Mills Prefers Screen to Stage.

Frank Mills, who plays the leading male role in Doris Kenyon's latest productions, "Wild Honey" and "Twilight," confesses he was born in Kalamazoo, Mich. The stage career of the actor has covered important engagements with Charles Frohman, Belasco, Klaw & Erlanger, Daniel Frohman, and as leading man with, among others, Olga Nethersole, Elsie Ferguson, Mary Mannering and Mrs. Patrick Campbell. For five years Mr. Mills played in London with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and others. His screen career covers a long list of the foremost productions of recent times.

Although in constant demand for stage productions, Mr. Mills frankly confesses that he prefers the screen. In order to fill the engagement with Doris Kenyon in "Wild Honey," Mr. Mills rejected three flattering offers to appear in Broadway productions.

Margarita Fisher Bestows Medal.

A gold medal offered by Margarita Fisher, American Film Company star featuring in "Flying A" productions, to the first Rockwell Field aviator to bring down a German plane was won by Lieut. Frank Luke, of Phoenix, Ariz. Because of Lieutenant Luke's death shortly before the armistice was signed the medal will be given to his father.

According to a letter received from the commander of his squadron, Lieutenant Luke is officially credited with having crashed his first Hun plane on September 12, five days previous to that of another Rockwell Field aviator's first plane.

In her forthcoming vehicle, "Fair Enough," Miss Fisher is considered at her best. In addition to being a riot of laughs, it has a thrilling and dramatic story showing that when a girl wants her way she generally gets it. It is to be released by the American Film Company through Pathe exchanges.

"Sunnyside" Is Chaplin's Next.

"Sunnyside" is the title given by Charlie Chaplin to his third production for distribution through exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Beyond this, and the statement that the story is laid in a small country town, little is known of the nature of the forthcoming release. Several advance "stills" from the Chaplin studios taken with Chaplin entertaining various celebrities in the course of his work indicate that he will appear in it in his number twelve shoes, baggy trousers and derby, but evidently without his cane. This latter item of adornment does not appear in any of the scene stills.

Red Cross Buys Cameragraph.

A letter to the Nicholas Power Company from the Pacific Amusements Supply Company states that it recently sold a 6-A Cameragraph to the American Red Cross Bureau of Camp Service, Naval Training Station, San Diego, Cal. A letter from the Red Cross officers to the Pacific Amusements Company says they got a picture 20 by 24 on a 172-foot throw. As a matter of fact, Power's machines have projected up to 300 feet.

World Pictures Prepares for Days of Prosperity

WORLD PICTURES is having the most prosperous period of its existence at the present moment. Every branch exchange is going at full capacity due to the renewed interest in motion pictures as the reflex of war conditions. The armistice has sent the public back to the theatres in such droves as the history of the industry does not recall its parallel.

Every head of industrial corporations scattered throughout the country is of the same opinion, that we will see no end of this long desired prosperity until wasted Europe is completely refurnished with both raw and manufactured American products. If the owners and managers of motion picture theatres expect to participate in this wonderful era of success it behooves them to make ready or get out of the business.

The World is reaching out with assurance that it is seizing the moment at its flood tide. In addition to its regular weekly releases of dependable pictures in which Montagu Love, Louise Huff, Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, June Elvidge and Madge Evans are the stars, it has arranged for a number of specials, including "America's Answer," "Under Four Flags" and an epoch-making picture of the moment entitled "What Shall We Do with Him."

Hollywood Escapes a Jinx.

When Director Edwin L. Hollywood completed the scenes taken at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., for the first Arden photoplay, "The Challenge Accepted," in which Zena Keefe is starring, he sighed in relief, for a jinx threatened the work to the end.

The military scenes required but the work of a day and Thursday was the day planned. No sooner had they arrived than a heavy rain fell and continued all day. The next day the sun shone bright and everything promised well until the cameraman let the camera fall off a fifty-foot platform and crash through the roof of the Y. M. C. A. hut, smashing the camera beyond hope of use. But on the third day good fortune smiled upon them and every scene was taken and the company on its way for home by six that evening. The next morning at six o'clock the entire camp was quarantined because of the influenza epidemic!

"The Challenge Accepted" is a dramatic story of the selective service draft as it affected the natives of the Blue Ridge mountains. Miss Keefe is ideal in the leading role. She is supported by Chester Barnett, John Hopkins, Sidney D'Albrook, Warren Cook, Charles Eldridge, Russell Simpson and Joel Day. Donald Gordon Reid, formerly connected with the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, is author of the story. The picture will be released on December 23 and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"Branding Broadway" Is Ready.

"Branding Broadway" is the picturesque title of William S. Hart's new Artcraft picture, scheduled for release December 15. Hart made part of the film in the big city. And he has made a picture which, according to report, is one of the liveliest he has ever done. Not the least unusual feature is that while the New York scenes were actually made in New York, the West is the locale of the scenes which are supposed to be laid there, or in the Southwest, to be exact. So the Artcraft star traveled more than 6,000 miles in order to make the picture accurate in detail as to background. Furthermore, the spectacle of Bill Hart in the big city, putting his indelible brand on the historic street, is something in itself decidedly out of the ordinary for the Artcraft star.

C. Gardner Sullivan is author of the story and Mr. Hart did his own directing, assisted by Robert Broadwell.

Seena Owen is leading woman.

Lytell Author of Metro's "Hitting the High Spots"

METRO'S all star series release for the week of December 9 will be "Hitting the High Spots," starring Bert Lytell. Mr. Lytell is the author as well as the star of the picture, which contains adventure, suspense, comedy and romance of a highly original order. The states and picturesque regions of Mexico are the backgrounds used for the scenes of this feature.

Lytell's role is that of a young live-wire American engineer, Bob Durland, who risks his life among Mexican insurrectos to save the life of the father of the girl he wants to marry. It is an adventure story pure and simple. Opening in the states, it takes the spectator to Mexico with the young engineer, who has determined to save some American owned oil wells from being confiscated by rebel Mexicans in a fierce and bloody revolution.

Eileen Percy, whose beauty and winning personality has endeared her to the moving picture public, has the role opposite Lytell. Among the other players are Winter Hall, Helen Dunbar, Gordon Griffith, Fred Goodwins, Stanton Heck, Al Edmonson, William Eagle Eye, William Courtright and Ileane Hume. In addition to these over a thousand Mexicans take part in the big scenes of the picture.

George D. Baker and Mr. Lytell adapted the story for the screen, and the direction was under Charles Swickard.

Bennison Trade Showings Reported a Big Success

THE prediction that Louis Bennison will be a highly successful screen star and repeat his stage successes received verification this week when Goldwyn managers in every branch office of the company held exhibitor trade showings of "Oh, Johnny!" the first Betzwood Film Company production in which Bennison is to greet the motion picture public.

"Oh, Johnny!" is but the first of six Louis Bennison Star Series productions which are to be released through Goldwyn, and on which contract bookings are reported as being large. The first production will have its premiere throughout America on December 22, and meanwhile it has been seen and applauded by representative theatre owners.

Already four Bennison productions have been completed, and three of them are titled and ready for distribution. The second Bennison release is to be "High Pockets," by William Patterson White, and directed by Ira M. Lowry, director of the entire series. The third release will be "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U."

Virginia Lee is Mr. Bennison's leading woman in "Oh, Johnny?" In the supporting cast are Alphonse Ethier, John Daly Murphy, Edward Roseman, Anita Cortex and Frank Goldsmith.

Pauline Starke Plays Irish Lass.

Catherine Carr and Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, both writers with successful photoplays to their credit, were the joint authors of "Irish Eyes," the Triangle release for the week of December 15. Pauline Starke is the featured player, and she is said to portray as lovable a little Irish lass as ever graced the screen. She plays the role of Pegeen, a poor, neglected stepchild of Irish fishing folks, who meets Sir Arthur Ormsby, and is helped by him to escape from her brutal guardians.

Rae Godfrey, Eugene Burr and Joe King are well known Triangle players in the supporting cast of this picture. "Irish Eyes" was directed by William Dowlan, with Elgin Leslie at the camera.

New Flood Lighting Booklet.

X-Ray Flood Lighting is the name of a new booklet recently published by the National X-Ray Reflector Company. This booklet explains at some length the important part flood lighting is playing in the winning of the war. Protection lighting as well as outdoor lighting for night work is being especially well cared for by the X-Ray projectors.

Several new silver mirrored reflectors for projectors and three new X-Ray projectors are featured in this bulletin. These additions make the X-Ray line of flood lighting units comprehensive.

Universal Starts Dec. 24 the Hearst Three-a-Week

THE arrangement by which Universal exchanges will market the Hearst three-a-week news service will be in effect the week beginning December 22. Having acquired the producing and distributing rights of the Universal Current Events and Animated Weekly and Mutual's Screen Telegram, the Hearst International News Service will in the future issue a Current Events on Sunday, Hearst News on Tuesday and Screen Telegram on Thursday. These will be released through Universal exchanges upon arrival from the laboratories.

The best cameramen in the principal cities of the globe have been engaged as correspondents for these weeklies and no effort or expense will be spared to make them beyond comparison.

December 24 will see the Hearst News No. 1 leave the laboratories and on December 26 the Screen Telegram will make its initial appearance at the Universal offices. These releases will be followed on December 29 by the Universal Current Events No. 85 and thereafter the three-a-week service will maintain regular schedule.

To give Pacific Coast exhibitors better service the Hearst service will have inserted in the Current Events and Hearst News weekly at Coast laboratories many local scenes and will furnish the Screen Telegram in regular form. C. J. Hubbell has gone to California for the Hearst interests to organize the Pacific Coast cameramen. The new arrangement provides exhibitors desiring local pictures with live local material and gives them this service at a regular schedule price. Frank Bradford, Universal film editor will edit the Pacific Coast weeklies.

W. W. Johnston, special Hearst representative, is now completing a tour of the leading cities arranging for newspaper co-operation on the news reels.

In addition to the news releases Universal will continue to issue its Screen Magazine, which is to be developed along newspaper feature lines.

Harry Morey Portrays a River Pirate.

"Hoarded Assets," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature scheduled for release the week of December 25, is described as a typical Morey picture, full of life and action, with strong love interest and mystery that hangs on to the end. It is Morey's second star series release under Vitagraph's new booking policy. The star is said to have one of his most effective roles in some time, that of a river pirate who is reclaimed by love, and the development of the romance shows a number of beautiful river scenes, as well as a number of real thrills, notably where he steals twenty kegs of gold coin and buries them on the river bed, and where he digs them up to be ambushed by detectives and confronted by the girl for whom he had stolen.

Paul Scardon, who directs the Harry Morey features, has been most successful in getting the pirate atmosphere of the story, using for location piers and wharves along the Hudson. The story is by Raymond S. Spears, and gives the heroine a most fascinating role, that of a girl who places love above riches, but because she happens to be a show girl the man she loves and who loves her believes that with her it is money first. This role is taken by Betty Blythe, Mr. Morey's leading woman, and others in the supporting cast are George Majeroni, Robert Gaillard and Jean Faige. The feature was produced at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

Rainbow Comedies in Demand.

Since the general resumption of motion picture exhibition a strong revival of demand for the Rainbow Comedies from the United States Motion Picture Corporation has been noted by General Film Company. The idea involved in all these one-reel comedies is a fast, snappy plot without slapstick, with considerable emphasis upon story value. The principal players are Lillian Vera and Eddie Boulden. The current release is "The Pipe of Peace," in which a young husband, a bride, a diamond ring and a Swede servant girl figure as the factors.

"What Shall We Do with Him?"

The Chicago Herald-Examiner is at the present time running an extraordinarily popular contest on the question of what shall be done with the ex-Kaiser. Over 2,000 replies a day are being received in answer to the question, "What Shall We Do with Him?" The tremendous success of the contest is a striking indication to exhibitors of what they can do by operating a similar contest in connection with their showings of the McClure-World special, "What Shall We Do with Him?" Exhibitors are manifesting an intense interest in this box office booster because they realize that its timeliness, its tremendous entertainment value and its possibilities for a smashing publicity campaign offer them a big opportunity.

Getting Ready for "The Long Arm."

Pathe scenario experts are busy preparing the episodes of "The Long Arm," the serial in which Ruth Roland, who has just renewed her Pathe contract, will be starred. The particular puzzle just at present is the proper method to make up an actor so that his face will resemble that of a tiger to a certain degree, while still holding more or less of the human features. The story of "The Long Arm" concerns three adventurers who penetrate to the wilds of Sumatra and steal an image of a tiger from a cult of natives known as the Tiger Worshippers.

It is expected work will be started on the serial some time this month at the Astra studios at Glendale, Cal. The serial will be released immediately at the close of that of Pearl White, "The Lightning Raider," which will probably be early in May.

It is officially announced that there is no foundation for the rumor that Bluebird Productions have been discontinued. The company does not contemplate any revision of the present schedule at this time, and it has mentioned important Bluebird productions on the program for some time to come. It is believed the appearance of one or two former Bluebird stars in current special attraction pictures may have led to the mistaken belief that Bluebirds were being eliminated.

Moral in Walthall Picture Based on Christian Science

IN the first of the eight productions in which Henry B. Walthall will be presented by the National Film Company of America, "And a Still Small Voice," a strong moral attaches itself to the picture that finds its base in Mary Baker Eddy's work "Science and Health," in which she says:

"A magistrate sometimes remits the penalty, but this may be no moral benefit to the criminal, and at best it only saves the criminal from one form of punishment. The moral law which has the right to acquit or condemn always demands restitution before mortals can go up higher. Broken law brings penalty in order to compel this progress."

The picture is not altogether a preachment of this science, but employs it to develop its tense situations and bring about a novel touch to the story. It adds an unusual interest to the picture, but is not brought out to any great degree so as to take away from the interest of the story itself.

A strong cast supports Mr. Walthall in this production which is headed by Fritzi Brunette, whose work in pictures is well known. Joseph Dowling in the part of Colonel Robert Singleton plays a character role that is typical of his line of work, and George Fisher does some of his best work in the part of Richard Dunlap.

This picture will be released by Robertson-Cole Company through the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Company on December 29.

"Married Virgin" Title Puzzling.

Since the announcement of the Maxwell production release of "The Married Virgin," which will be at all General Film Company exchanges in a few days, considerable curiosity has been shown in the subject. Inquiries have come into the General Film Company exchanges regarding the nature of the film, many rather wild guesses being made as to the nature of the plot.

"If the title arouses that much interest among exhibitors," said Joe Maxwell, the producer, "it ought to arouse the strongest possible sort of attention from the public."

It is stated that the story of "The Married Virgin," which is by Hayden Talbot, mingles thrills with psychology in a strange domestic complication. How a rich man's skeleton in the closet steps out to open the door for a social marauder to enter the household forms the hub of the plot.

Mabel Normand in West Is Making New "Sis Hopkins"

NEVER before more completely in her element, Mabel Normand is throwing herself joyously into the task of making her first Goldwyn Picture in California. It is "Sis Hopkins," famous for a generation past as Rose Melville's stage play. The screen version bids fair not only to duplicate the success of the spoken version, but to add greatly to the reputation of Mabel Normand as a unique comedienne.

Frolicking under the sunlight of Southern California, with Clarence G. Badger as her director, Miss Normand finds herself in company with an uncommonly fine supporting cast, each member of which is giving the star whole-hearted support.

John Bowers is leading man, making his second appearance in Goldwyn Pictures and his first in California. Thomas Jefferson, Sam DeGrasse, Nicholas Cogley and Eugenie Ford play the other principal roles, and all vie with Miss Normand in extracting every particle of comedy from the parts allotted to them.

Much of the action takes place in a field plentifully dotted with ripening pumpkins, and it is predicted Miss Normand will give an entirely new and different account of herself as a laughter provoker. In these episodes, as well as throughout the play, her costumes and make-up are expected to cause no end of amusement.

Barrymore Finishing Paramount Picture.

At the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation John Barrymore is nearing the finish of his Paramount picture, "Here Comes the Bride," which John Stuart Robertson is directing. This is an adaptation of the play of the same title which was written by Max Marcin and Ray Atwell, and which was produced a year ago at the George M. Cohan Theatre. Charles Whittaker, who has adapted several stage productions lately for Famous Players-Lasky, is responsible for the continuity.

Mr. Barrymore's leading woman is Faire Binney. The supporting cast is Frank Losee, Frances Kaye, Alfred Hickman, William David and Leslie King.

Theda Bara Begins Play.

Having completed the four weeks' vacation made necessary by the influenza shutdown, Theda Bara, the William Fox star, has begun work on a super-production temporarily titled "The Scarlet Altars." The picture is being produced at one of the Fox studios in Yonkers under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. The scenario is by Adrian Johnson from an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley.

Tom Santschi
Just Before His Fight with Mitchell Lewis in "Code of the Yukon" (Select).

Lewis-Santschi Fight Is Big Factor in Select Film

IN "Code of the Yukon" (Select) there is a fight that will bring fight fans to their feet. Those who remember Mitchell Lewis in "The Barrier" will readily concede his ability to mix things up, while exhibitors whose memory takes them back to "The Spoilers" know also that Tom Santschi is capable of exchanging a few wallops himself. And in "Code of the Yukon" the director has brought these two together.

"Big Mitch" Lewis has a likeable role, that of a French-Canadian who seeks the quiet of the gold fields in order to gain sufficient money to hunt down the man who has ill-treated his sister. His simplicity and naturalness awaken a strong bond of sympathy and love in the breasts of the spectators.

The two contenders meet in a little log cabin at the edge of a clearing; Jean, in his simple backwoods garb and tasseled cap, and Santschi as Dan Cregan, in the immaculate dress of the typical gold field dance hall owner.

There is just one second of sparring. Jean strikes, and hits again and again before the startled Cregan finds the power to resist the terrible onslaught. They grapple and plunge about the small room. A moment later they are free, standing toe to toe. A heavy table crashes through the side of the cabin; the men are in the open air. They struggle to the edge of a deep embankment, and in a flash they are in a raging stream. They leap to their feet, and Jean downs his adversary.

This battle between these two big men is not the only outstanding feature of "Code of the Yukon."

Pauline Stark and Joe King in "Irish Eyes" (Triangle).

Select to Issue as Special Ince's "The Midnight Patrol"

SELECT announces the acquisition of the Thomas H. Ince special production, "The Midnight Patrol." The picture will be released as a special. It was made by Mr. Ince prior to the existing agreement, whereby his productions are exclusively released by another concern.

"The Midnight Patrol" is a swiftly moving melodrama featuring the work of that everyday American hero, the police detective. A cast of even excellence has been assembled for the feature, and includes Thurston Hall, Rosemary Theby, Marjorie Bennett and William Musgrave, and Kino and Yamamatto, two Chinese actors of ability. The story for the picture was prepared by Julian Josephson and Denison Clift. Director Irvin V. Willet was in immediate charge of the production.

Most of the action takes place in and around San Francisco's great Chinatown. We see the plotting and counter-plotting of a corrupt ring in which local politicians enlist as confederates unscrupulous leaders of the Chinese underworld. An important episode pictures the disruption of a band of opium smugglers and the capture of the ringleaders in the illicit trade.

Select believes that in "The Midnight Patrol" it is offering to its patrons a picture which will be welcomed.

To Produce Feature with Seven Stars.

The most ambitious and pretentious production ever made by World Pictures will be "A Scrap of Paper," which will inaugurate the resumption of studio activity of this company. The cast embraces all the stars connected with World Pictures, and includes Montagu Love, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Madge Evans, Jack Drumier and Johnny Hines. It will be directed by Dell Henderson.

The scenario was written by Wallace C. Clifton from an original story secured by the World Pictures' scenario department from a famous French author.

This aggregation of talent has been arranged for this production because the World believes that the exceptional strength of the story told in "A Scrap of Paper" demands a wholly stellar presentation.

"Dolly's Vacation" Story of Childhood.

Baby Marie Osborne, the Pathe Diando child star, is perfectly framed in the five-reel program feature, "Dolly's Vacation," which will be released by Pathe on December 29. The story is by Mrs. George Griffin Lee, to whom the heart of childhood is an open book, and was directed by William Bertram, whose success in handling this sort of story has been commended. His work in directing Baby Marie is skillful, patient and sympathetic.

In this production Baby Marie's pranks, in which she is aided by the clever little pickaninny Sambo, her "good man Friday," will yield hearty laughter and continual smiles from her child admirers. The dramatic interest will hold the parents when they take the kiddies to see it.

Johnson Cannibal Pictures Being Wildly Exploited

THE Martin Johnson Cannibals of the South Seas pictures will be released in the United States and Canada by the Robertson-Cole Company through the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation. Much promotion work has been done by the Robertson-Cole Company to further public interets in this subject. The premiere showing in Canada under its management brought crowded houses to Massey Hall, where it was offered for an entire week. The newspapers were lavish in their praise of the subject, and it was considered one of the most auspicious picture presentations of the season in that city.

In New York it was offered at the Rivoli Theatre by Samuel Rothapfel. Mr. Johnson appeared in person in connection with the picture and told many interesting things about his trip as the film was presented. The New York papers devoted considerable space to the picture.

Interest is being maintained by a broad line of advertising. A massive signboard has been erected on Broadway at Forty-seventh street, which graphically tells Broadway's millions the wonders of "Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas." The recent showing at the Astor Hotel, which was put on in a very unusual manner, was attended by a great number of exhibitors who since have anxiously been awaiting the news of the releasing channel. At this showing Mr. Beynon conducted the orchestra. He is also responsible for the special orchestral score which is used in conjunction with this subject. In addition to this many things of a helpful nature have been prepared, which include lithographs in sizes from one-sheet to twenty-four sheets as well as slides, trailers and many unusual exhibitors' aids.

This first installment of the Martin Johnson Cannibals of the South Seas will be released through the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation on December 15. The second installment, which also is ready, will be issued on February 15.

Capellani to Try Chinese Food.

Albert Capellani, the celebrated French director, who will direct Mme. Nazimova in "The Red Lantern," her forthcoming production, following "Eye for Eye," has made arrangements to spend several days and nights in the Chinatown of Los Angeles studying the peculiarities and native customs of the Chinese at first hand.

The Nazimova picture has a Chinese setting, and as much of the drama depends upon racial traits and passions, Director Capellani determined to observe them among the Chinese themselves instead of relying upon the observation of travelers and writers.

During his stay in the Chinese quarter Director Capellani will, to paraphrase an old saying, "do as the Chinese do"—eating the same food, enjoying the same shelter and getting the Chinese point of view through an interpreter.

Three Two-Reelers for Gloria.

In a series of three two-reel comedy dramas, to be released by Pathe under the general title of "The Fortunes of Corinne," Baby Gloria Joy carries the role of the heroine upon her frail but capable shoulders. This child actress is well named, it seems, and has an exceptionally keen sense of comedy and of pathos. The series will be released in the following order: Week of December 23, "The Fortunes of Corinne"; January 5, "I Want to be a Lady"; January 19, "Corinne, Come Here!"

Salisbury and Clifford Again to Play Together

MONROE SALISBURY and Ruth Clifford are to appear on the screen together again, according to word received from the Universal West Coast studios. Better still, they are to be directed by Rupert Julian. It was under the direction of Mr. Julian the Salisbury-Clifford duo made some of the most successful Bluebirds released last year, among them "The Desire of the Moth," "The Savage," "Hands Down," and "Hungry Eyes." Among the six productions started at Universal City last week were "Pirate Gold" which features Mr. Salisbury, with Miss Clifford as his leading woman. The story develops a modern theme out of an ancient story of sea piracy.

Simultaneously with the starting of action on "Pirate Gold" Priscilla Dean began work on "The Gutter Rose," under the direction of Tod Browning. The initial scenes of "Cherries Are Ripe," featuring Edith Roberts, supported by Smiling Billy Mason, were shot in the Jack Dillon lot, and Ida May Park began work on Mary MacLaren's next Universal Special Attraction entitled "Whose Widow?" a society drama said to be especially suitable to Miss MacLaren's talents. Carmel Myers, directed by Paul Powell, has begun "The Wild Girl" and Marie Walcamp is acting out the second episode of her forthcoming serial release, "The Fifth Ace," written by Hope Loring and directed by J. P. MacGowan.

In addition to working on these films Lyons and Moran are working on comedies, Helen Gibson is half finished with a new two-reel Western play and Harry Carey is putting the finishing touches on "The Outcast of Poker Flat," which has been adapted from several Bret Harte stories.

The film editing department is completing the preparation of "The Beautiful Mongrel," which features Carmel Myers; "Destiny," featuring Dorothy Phillips, and a Carey picture entitled "Riders of Vengeance."

"Primrose" Is Now "Day Dreams."

Goldwyn announces a change in the title of Madge Kennedy's next production. Instead of "Primrose," the title selected for it by the author of the story, Cosmo Hamilton, it will be called "Day Dreams." It was written especially for the star.

Louise Glaum to Make Series of Productions

LOUISE GLAUM, long a star in her own right, has entered the ranks of the independent producers and has begun work on the first of a series of special features. Miss Glaum's initial effort promises to establish a high standard. The author of her story is C. Gardner Sullivan, and the production is under the supervision of Allan Dwan. He has the assistance of Art Rosson. The collaboration of these film celebrities, combined with the technical environments which surround Miss Glaum, indicate a notable production.

The Louise Glaum Company, after negotiating with a number of the important California concerns, has leased space at the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City, just approaching completion. The cast with which Miss Glaum has surrounded herself comprises Matt Moore, Edwin Stevens and Jane Novak.

Although modern throughout, the production is set in Oriental environment. The story itself, according to Mr. Sullivan, is one of the best dramatic film stories he has ever written, and his successes are many.

Henry Lehrman Enlarges His Producing Activities

HENRY LEHRMAN, vice-president and general producer of Sunshine comedies, has just added a fourth company to his personnel at his studios in Hollywood to meet the increasing demand for Sunshine comedies. When, over a year ago, Henry Lehrman sold his producing interests to start making Sunshine comedies he was considered a foremost producer of comedies. The larger, more modern studios which he erected for his Sunshine comedies allowed him wide scope.

During the past year the demand for Sunshine comedies has been steadily increasing. In order to release one production every other week, three companies have been working unceasingly. Now Mr. Lehrman has decided to build still larger comedies. To allow time for their production he has added another company to his personnel, making four companies in place of three.

The four companies will work under the general supervision of Henry Lehrman, and the releasing arrangement will be the same as before, one production every two weeks, and they will be booked by the Fox exchanges to exhibitors whether they hold contracts for other Fox productions or not.

"Too Fat to Fight" Was Written Around McIntyre

FRANK McINTYRE has always been fat. His fat, in fact, has been and is his fortune. By no means does this imply that he is not a player of attainments—and would be if he were as slim as a string bean. His sense of humor comes from within. But his fat helps it.

Now, he is the featured player in Rex Beach's new play, "Too Fat to Fight," and for the first time in his career his fat is glorified. Hitherto it has been only incidental. In "Dimples" Dalrymple it is the foundation of the photoplay.

Frank McIntyre has been a laughable feature of so many Broadway successes that neither he nor his admirers can remember them all. Rex Beach, whose possession of knowledge of plays and players is the envy of his friends, wrote "Too Fat to Fight" with McIntyre in mind, even though the rotund actor was bound by a contract which looked as if it would conflict with the hopes and plans of the author and Goldwyn, the distributor.

Fortune favored, and the stage play in which the comedian appeared was not a popular success, in consequence of which he ambled into the Goldwyn Studio at the very time Rex Beach had planned. What he did in the production—and to it—really ought to be seen for full appreciation.

Get Scripts for New Vitagraph Serial.

Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, stars of Vitagraph's current serial, "The Iron Test," have received the scripts on their next fifteen-episode play, work on which will start at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood in the near future. Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Cyrus Townsend Brady are the authors of the new serial, the title of which has not been announced.

She Rose—by Any Other Name.

Ann May fell down a bank at Edgewood, N. J., while posing for a scene in a Frank Keeney photoplay, under Sid Olcott's direction. She suffered a slight concussion of her spine and had to go under Dr. Urdman's care, with her final scene in the picture still to be finished.

Miss May made a rapid recovery, but she was not too quick for the waiting director, who sent his assistant up to see her with an urgent request that she come to the Keeney studio and complete her work if her physical condition permitted. Miss May's aunt was so taken with the assistant's appeal that she forthwith relayed it to the physician.

To both of these lengthy communications the physician replied with characteristic brevity: "Replying to the two requests just to hand, I can do no better than to cite the patient's name in reply to the both of 'em."

Rosemary Theby in Metro Support.

Rosemary Theby is again in a Metro cast. The sinuous Rosemary is in support of May Allison in "Peggy Does Her Darndest," just starting at Metro's west coast studios. Miss Theby, who is dark, is a splendid foil to Miss Allison.

Miss Theby's last Metro role was with Bert Lytell, when she played the female lead, Charity Garvice, in "Faith." With May Allison Miss Theby's part is that of Eleanor Ensloe, snobbish elder sister of Peggy, the heroine.

Gloria Swanson Playing in Artcraft.

Cecil B. DeMille has reached the final stages of his Artcraft picture, "Don't Change Your Husband." He is now using a trio of most elaborate sets. One represents a fanciful idea of the beauty of the world, another the riches of the world and the third the love of the world, all being visions conjured up in the mind of a young wife by a romantic description on the part of a whilom lover. For one of the leading roles Mr. DeMille selected Gloria Swanson.

Borneo, one of the largest islands in the world, is the subject of the twenty-third of the Post Travel Series, released by Pathe December 15. This island is inhabited by the head-hunting Dyaks, a race of people who, the camera shows, are much larger in physique and approach nearer the savage than any of the other peoples in the Malay Archipelago. Interesting close-ups of the Dyaks, much of their home life, their forms of entertainment and amusement have been faithfully caught by the camera.

Nine Companies Working at William Fox Studios

NO fewer than nine companies are now at work, in the East and on the Pacific Coast, making pictures for William Fox. Three of the companies have begun on productions this week.

At the Triangle studio in Yonkers, J. Gordon Edwards is staging a super-production temporarily titled "The Scarlet Altars." The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley, and was scenarioized by Adrian Johnson.

Richard Stanton began on the creation of a Standard Picture bearing the working title "Lucky Charm" and starring William Farnum. The story was written by George V. Hobart. The picture will have several jungle scenes.

George Walsh also started a picture under the direction of Edward Dillon. The working title is "Jinx Jones," and the story and scenario were written by Raymond L. Schrock.

Another For company to start work is that headed by Virginia Pearson, under the direction of Edmund Lawrence. This latest Pearson picture is adapted from a magazine story, "He That is Without Sin," by Mae Edginton.

In the West Jane and Katherine Lee have resumed work on "Smiles," under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom.

Another Fox star working in Hollywood is Peggy Hyland, who is in her second week on "The Girl with No Regrets," an Excel Picture.

Tom Mix is busy on a whirlwind Western play, under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint.

Lynn F. Reynolds, who has directed Mix in recent pictures, is directing Gladys Brockwell in a Victory Picture which is nearing completion at Hollywood. This picture is described as a drama of politics and a woman's wit.

Evelyn Nesbit, working at the Victor studio in Manhattan, is nearing the completion of "Woman! Woman!" under the direction of Kenean Buel.

Universal Photographs Fleet Surrender.

Universal has made good its statement that its weekly news forces never sleep. When the German Imperial fleet recently surrendered to the British fleet as part of the agreement between the Teutons and the Allies, cameramen representing Universal were on the job from early morning until late at night obtaining the best views of the surrender.

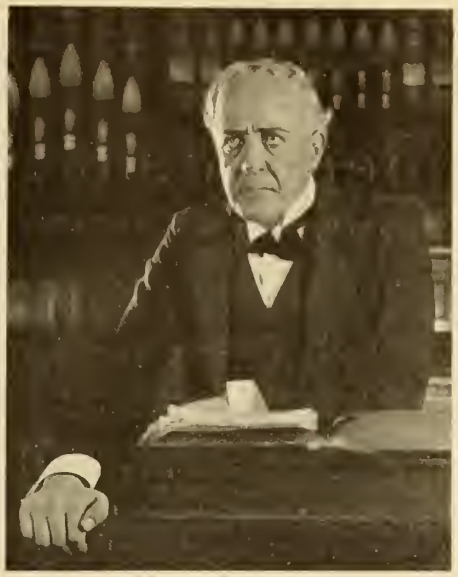
Several thousand feet of negative of the surrender were shipped to the New York Universal offices on the Adriatic scheduled to dock in New York December 9. However, the arrival of the ship was delayed, and Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal weeklies, with an assistant, waited for the ship to arrive at quarantine Monday night until the wee sma' hours, when the ship was sighted. Boarding her at quarantine they had the negative ready for the customs inspectors before the boat docked. Immediately after landing they rushed the negative to the Fort Lee laboratories.

"The Surrender of the German Fleet" is the tentative title for the historical news reel.

Sullivan Cartoon in Demand.

Reports from various Universal exchanges throughout the West and Central West indicate that Universal's recent one reel cartoon "Over the Rhine with Charlie," by Pat Sullivan, is much in demand by exhibitors.

Mr. Sullivan's initial cartoon entitled "How Charlie Captured the Kaiser," has had wide distribution throughout the Central States, and, due to its timely title and many humorous episodes, "Over the Rhine with Charlie" is much sought by the showmen. Several exhibitors have booked these one-reel comics to show with Mildred Harris Jewel productions.



Winter Hall

As the clergyman torn between pulpit ambitions and loyalty to his faith, in "The Turn in the Road," the new Brentwood feature, written and directed by King W. Vidor.

A magazine story written by May Edginton has been chosen as the next Fox Excel picture for Virginia Pearson. The story is entitled "He That Is Without Sin," and Miss Pearson has already begun work under Edmund Lawrence.

The beginning of the new Pearson play marks the return of Mr. Lawrence to the active list of Fox directors. Mr. Lawrence had directed Miss Pearson in several of her pictures up to early in the fall, when he became seriously ill. The new picture is declared to be sensational in its theme and situations, and when it was published in one of the popular magazines created something of a furore.

Metro West Coast Studios Active.

The Metro studios in Hollywood have emerged from an enforced idleness of six weeks. It is expected midwinter will see ten companies busy, with cameras clicking on two lots embracing four big stages.

Records are claimed for speed in putting up the new studios. C. P. Butler, studio manager, and R. C. Godfrey, superintendent of construction, who are assisting Treasurer Joseph W. Engel in the operation, point with pride to the fact that the two big open stages and the large enclosed stage have been completed in fourteen working days.

Louise Huff in Emerson-Loos Subject.

Although the complete cast for the John Emerson-Anita Loos Production, "When the Boys Come Home," which is now in production at the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has not been announced, it is stated that the leading roles in this Paramount-Artcraft special will be in the hands of Ernest Truex and Louise Huff. The return of Miss Huff to the ranks of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, temporary though her association will be, will please her admirers.

New Griffith Picture For Artcraft.

The fox trot was a little too strenuous for him in New York. Over there, where he made a man of himself, he killed a German with his bare hands, drowned him in a lice-ridden, water-logged trench.

This study of human character and evolution is one of the interesting stories woven into D. W. Griffith's photoplay, "The Greatest Thing in Life." It was released through Artcraft December 8. The character Edward Livingston is portrayed by Robert Harron.

Robertson-Cole to Issue Complete Musical Scores

THE inauguration of complete music scores with the Robertson-Cole Company releases is an innovation in the service that will be rendered with their productions which are handled through the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation. This service starts with the first release, "Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas," which is issued on December 15.

George W. Beynon, who has devoted many years to the preparation of musical scores for motion pictures and is an accomplished musician, is the director of the musical department of the Robertson-Cole Company. Mr. Beynon bears the distinction of being the first to adapt orchestral scores to motion pictures.

Considerable comment was made on the musical offerings at the premiere presentation of "Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas" by the press as well as by the crowded audiences which viewed this production both in New York City and Toronto, Canada.

The Billie Rhodes subject "The Girl of My Dreams," will also be accompanied by a complete musical score arranged by Mr. Beynon. Many of the numbers will be themes of his own composition.

In speaking of the musical problems of the orchestra leader Mr. Beynon remarked: "Musicians in the majority of cases have to furnish their own music and they cannot afford a great quantity of it because of their small salaries. To properly play a show, I find that seventy distinct selections must be used. If the show changes every day, five hundred numbers are utilized in seven days.

"It is estimated that the average leader's library contains less than eight hundred selections. This causes constant repetition much to the detriment of the picture. In large cities only do the music retailers carry orchestral, piano or organ music. Then there is the matter of time. It requires from two to four hours of the musical director's time to set a picture to music. While cue sheets might prove of some assistance they do not conclusively solve the problem as completely as orchestral scores."

The work of assembling and titling the Paramount-Artcraft special production, "The Silver King," in which William Faversham is starred, has been completed and the finished picture was given its first showing a few days ago in the projection room of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at 485 Fifth avenue.

In this screen version of the fine old melodrama by Henry Arthur Jones and Henry Herman, which was first produced in London in 1882, Mr. Faversham has the role made famous by Wilson Barrett in the original production, and later by Osmond Tearle in this country.

Show American Troops in Russia.

The first pictures to come out of Russia in two years are shown in the Official War Review No. 27, which will be released December 29. These pictures are of the most pronounced interest, as they show American troops marching through the streets of Russian towns, American machine gun corps in action, etc. This issue of the Review also include some striking naval pictures, scenes of British, French and Italian troops. As very little has been printed about the American expeditionary force in Russia, it is believed these pictures will receive much attention.

Film Clearing House Gets Blackton Productions

ARRANGEMENTS have been consummated by which J. Stuart Blackton's pretentious offering, "Life's Greatest Problem," which is a production of a special nature, will be distributed as the second feature of the Ten-Twenty-Thirty series through the Film Clearing House.

The first offering of this series will be, as previously announced, a production by Julius Steger, starring Evelyn Nesbit. The delay in starting this series has been due to the influenza epidemic. However, it is announced that this picture will be released during the current month.

In "Life's Greatest Problem" Mitchell Lewis is featured, and, in producing the picture, Mr. Blackton received the co-operation of such men as Charles M. Schwab and Edward N. Hurley. This is a picture of magnitude, and the fact that it is available under the Ten-Twenty-Thirty policy adds to the interest already displayed by exhibitors in the twelve pictures to be released under this plan.

Immediate distribution has been arranged by taking advantage of the recent opening of the Film Clearing House exchanges, which are equipped to handle the pictures of independent producers and groups of producers, as well as series of special productions, and it is announced that the Ten-Twenty-Thirty series will be booked separate and distinct from all other pictures using the Film Clearing House for physical distribution, and bookings will be taken care of by the Independent Sales Corporation.

In addition to "Life's Greatest Problem" another Blackton subject' "The Littlest Scout," a five-reel feature starring little Charles Stuart Blackton, will also be handled by the Independent Sales Corporation through the Film Clearing House. Mr. Blackton announces that the fact that he has placed the two productions mentioned in the manner indicated does not mean that he has severed any of his other affiliations in the industry, as the plan of the Film Clearing House is such that any producer can use it for one or more pictures without obligating himself to market all of his products in the same way.

"Life's Greatest Problem," which was originally titled "Safe for Democracy," recently was shown at a special performance at the Rivoli, and its basic idea deals with the labor problem, and deals with things that people are talking and thinking about at the present time. The theme stresses the power of the new democracy, and the picture is said to have the endorsement of the Division of Films. There is an abundance of comedy supplied by two hoboes played by Mitchel Lewis and Gus Alexander. In addition the cast includes Eugene Strong, Aubrey Beattie, Ruby DeRemer, Ida Darling, Helen Ferguson, John H. Goldsworthy, John C. Wade and Sidney D'Albrook.

Arrow to Release "Unique" Comedies.

Arrow Film Corporation has secured for exclusive distribution in the United States and Canada thirty-two single-reel comedies produced by the United States Motion Pictures Corporation. Twenty-six were released through the Paramount program, but have been withdrawn, while six of the comedies are new.

The reissues have been retitled and re-edited, and the entire series are being offered state rights exchanges, to be released one a week commencing December 20.

These comedies, formerly known as Black Diamond Comedies, are described as refined slap-stick comedy, and a considerable portion of each reel is devoted to trick photography. Arrow announces that rights to five sections of territory in the United States have already been disposed of.

Star of "S-L" Pictures a Well-Known Player

E. K. LINCOLN, at present starring in "S-L" Pictures, has for a number of years been known to motion picture patrons for his work on the screen, as he was one of the first leading men with the Vitagraph, working in company with such stars as Anita Stewart, Clara Kimball Young, Edith Storey and other well known players.

Mr. Lincoln was born in Pennsylvania, educated at the state university and early decided to forsake commercial life for a dramatic career, and appeared in juvenile roles in a number of stage successes. Following a connection of several years with Vitagraph, he appeared in special pictures for World Film Corporation with Barbara Castleton, Ethel Clayton and others, and more recently has appeared in "The American Spirit" under William Christy Cabanne's direction; also with Dolores Cassinelli in "Lafayette, We Come!" and "Stars of Glory" under Peonce Perret's direction. Following the completion of the last named picture, he decided to become a producer, and formed the newly organized "S-L" Productions in association with Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin.

He is the owner of the Lincoln studios in Grantwood, N. J., which are among the best equipped in the country, and in which a number of productions in which he has appeared have been produced. Mr. Lincoln is also the possessor of a magnificent estate in the Berkshires, and is an ardent devotee of outdoor sports, motor-boating and automobiling.

Author of "Orphant Annie" Is Popular with Children

IN the six-reel production of the late James Whitcomb Riley's poem, "Little Orphant Annie," which is being state righted by Pioneer Film Corporation, Colleen Moore and Tom Santschi are the featured players, and in the supporting cast appear little Billy Jacobs, also little Ben Alexander, who has enacted important roles in a number of D. W. Griffith's pictures.

The New York Evening World recently stated that over one million children had contributed toward the building of a memorial to James Whitcomb Riley, which was unveiled at Greenfield, Mass., his former home. Nathan Hirsh, president of Pioneer, in this connection says: "The fact that over one million school children contributed to a fund to buy a statue in honor of their poet friend shows in what esteem he is held, and proves that a large number of people will want to see the picture.

"When the children love someone it is very safe to assume that the grown folks love him also. There are millions of patrons awaiting the showing of 'Little Orphant Annie,' and children all over the country will be ready to advertise this picture by word of mouth for exhibitors—they will want to see it, and the patronage of the older folks will be forthcoming."

Mr. Hirsh further reports that great interest is being shown by exhibitors, who are inquiring as to when and how they can book the picture; letters are being received from all parts of the country, and he has never handled a feature which seems to have caught on so quickly.

The Pioneer is issuing an especially attractive line of paper for this production. In addition to posters there are press sheets and advertising helps of all kinds to aid the exhibitors in putting over an effective business-getting advertising and publicity campaign. It is said that "Little Orphant Annie" is a true to life filmization of the hoosier poet's immortal poem, and the cast was carefully selected for types. Many of the scenes were filmed in the exact locations of the original story.

Several Sales Announced on the Tom Mix Reissue

SINCE the announcement recently made by Exclusive Features, Inc., that they would place on the market a series of sixteen two-reel comedy-drama reissues starring Tom Mix, a large number of inquiries have been received from exhibitors throughout the country asking how, when and where these big little features are to be booked, indicating the interest that has been aroused in this series.

Tom Mix is one of the most popular of the Western type of actors, and his portrayal of the rugged Western fighting man has made his name well known to motion picture audiences as well as a box-office asset. In the series of two-reelers which are to be released by Exclusive Features on state rights basis, Tom Mix is said to appear in some of his best roles and to perform stunts that are sure-fire thrill-producers, which should make them strong short features.

The series will consist of sixteen two-reelers. The first, "Twisted Trails," will be ready for release January 1, and the remainder will be released one each week thereafter. It is reported that territory is already selling fast, a considerable portion of the country having been disposed of.

Among the prominent buyers who have secured territory on this series is David Mundstuk, of Strand Features, Detroit, who has bought the Michigan rights as a result of a personal visit to New York; also R. M. Savini, who secured the Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina and Tennessee rights; Frank Gersten, who secured rights to northern New Jersey, and Southwestern Film Corporation, who purchased this series for Texas and Oklahoma.

The office of Exclusive Features, Inc., the distributors for this series, is located at 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, to whom inquiries should be addressed.

Arrow to Release "The Profiteer."

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces for early release the six-part special attraction entitled "The Profiteer," in which Alma Hanlon and Jack Sherrill are starred.

The production was directed by J. K. Holbrook at the Wharton studios, and deals with the after-war intrigues of a captain of industry to secure control of an invention so that he may profit at the expense of the American government, and, frustrated in his scheme, attempts to deliver the secret process to a coterie who have hopes of restoring the old regime in Germany.

The production is now being edited by Jesse J. Goldburg, of the Arrow Film Corporation, and will be ready for release on a state rights basis about December 15.

It is the plan of the Arrow Film Corporation to release one new production every two months, to be made by independent directors, which attractions are to be released on the state rights market and sold independent of the other.

E. K. Lincoln Meets with Accident.

E. K. Lincoln, star of the first "S-L" production, recently met with an unfortunate accident in the studio. While working on a scene under the direction of Ralph Ince a piece of steel became imbedded in his right eye. The foreign substance was finally extracted by a specialist. For several days Mr. Lincoln was unable to use the eye. However, he has now entirely recovered and is receiving the congratulations of his host of friends because of his happy escape.

A curious coincidence in this connection is that some time ago Rockcliffe Fellowes suffered a similar misfortune while also working in a production under Mr. Ince's direction.

Special Releasing Plan for "Romance of the Air"

A UNIQUE releasing plan, which, it is said, will be of great advertising value to exhibitors, has been devised by the Crest Pictures Corporation for the distribution of the aerial feature "A Romance of the Air," featuring Lieut. Bert Hall, the American Ace, and Edith Day, the prima donna of "Going Up."

The releasing plan begins in the New England States, where Lieutenant Hall will make a personal appearance at the premier of "A Romance of the Air" in Boston on December 30, when this picture begins a four weeks' engagement at the Tremont Temple Theatre. Each territory will then be released only after Bert Hall's personal appearance, that is to say, no territories will be either sold or leased until after a featured engagement of several weeks in one large exchange centre of each territory, during which Lieutenant Hall will appear personally at matinee and evening performances and give an informal talk on some of his experiences in the Foreign Legion and as an aviator in the original Lafayette Escadrille during his three years on three fronts.

Lieut. Bert Hall is widely known throughout the country for the daring exploits which resulted in his receiving seven medals from French, English and Russian Governments. The unusual amount of publicity which will result from Lieutenant Hall's personal appearance at some of the most prominent houses should be of much value to exhibitors.

In addition to Hall's exploits in the air, which are widely known, his book "En L'Air," is now in its third edition. Furthermore, a large number of newspapers have syndicated the story in serial form. After the engagement of "A Romance of the Air" at the Tremont Temple Theatre for four weeks in Boston, this story of a romance of the clouds, founded on Lieutenant Hall's book, will probably be shown next for a run at one of the larger houses in Chicago.

The big features of this Crest production from a box-office angle are: First, It is an authentic and elaborate picture of aerial warfare produced with an American hero of the world war as its featured player, who, with the exception of Major Thaw, is said to be the only survivor of the Lafayette Escadrille; second, it has an appealing love story with unique background and original situations, and third, it has unusual advertising possibilities, especially when Lieut. Bert Hall appears in person at the feature presentations.

Special Advertising Aids for "The Panther Woman"

In accordance with the policy of the Petrova Picture Company to offer exhibitors distinctive advertising aid in connection with each production two excellent helps are being offered to exhibitors free of charge in connection with "The Panther Woman." They are a beautiful twenty-four-sheet stand and a specially prepared electrical lobby display.

The poster is a magnificent stand done in black and white, and carrying a full length likeness of Madame Petrova as the central figure. It is said to be one of the most distinctive twenty-four-sheet stands ever issued. The poster readily lends itself to utility, and, after being used for "The Panther Woman," can be displayed for other Petrova productions. The electrical lobby display is a specially constructed picture frame which changes to all colors of the rainbow, at the same time showing Madame Petrova in various poses.

TIMES BUILDING, NEW YORK

Hall Organization to Handle "Wanted for Murder"

IMMEDIATELY after the premiere of "Wanted for Murder" at the Broadway Theatre, New York, Sunday, December 8, arrangements were consummated in a few minutes by which this production will be handled by the Independent Sales Corporation through the newly established Film Clearing House.

Harry Rapf, producer of this feature, desires to call attention to the erroneous impression that appears to have been created to the effect that the production was directed by Dr. Frank Crane.

This is probably due to the fact that both Dr. Crane and S. J. Kaufman, who is responsible for the scenario, are members of the staff of the New York Globe. It is merely a unique coincidence that the director of the picture also bears the name of Frank Crane. However, this Mr. Crane is an entirely different person, and is a prominent motion picture director who has a large number of feature productions to his credit.

Director Crane says being of the same name as the well known writer has brought about several amusing incidents. Recently, while taking some scenes for "Wanted for Murder" in a nearby town, an elderly woman laboring under the illusion that he was Dr. Crane requested that he autograph one of her books. He did so as follows: "To Mrs. H——, I autograph this book, and hope you will get as much amusement out of the book as I get by autographing it."

At the opening of this picture at the Broadway, Irene Franklin and Burt Green attended, making a special trip from Philadelphia for this purpose, and duplicated on the stage the scene they used to entertain the boys in France.

Unique Exploitation Arranged for "Mickey"

ONE of the most unique stunts in connection with the exploitation of a picture was the showing of "Mickey," the feature starring Mabel Normand, distributed by W. H. Productions Company, on the Steamship George Washington, on which President Wilson sailed for France. The showing was arranged by Chief Radio Operator Rose and Kenneth MacLarney, who is in charge of entertainment on board ship. Photos and posters and even a twenty-four sheet were to be displayed in various sections of the ship. In addition two thousand copies of the song "Mickey" were supplied for distribution on board and two graphophones with "Mickey" records were furnished by the Columbia Graphophone Company.

The campaign as outlined, is similar to the manner in which the exploitation is to be handled in the large theatres of the country. The song is to be played, and chorus slide shown at each performance until the evening of the showing of "Mickey" and the orchestra will also play "Mickey."

An addition to the showing of "Mickey" on board the ship, it was arranged to distribute cards among the passengers requesting an expression of opinion and the W. H. Productions Company anticipate having a notable index of the opinions of prominent men regarding this production.

Arrangements have also been made for Messrs. Rose and MacLarney to demonstrate to foreign buyers in the various ports in which the George Washington will visit, just how "Mickey" is being handled in this country, according to American methods.

Glowing reports are being received from a number of houses which have run this production. The manager of the Regent Theatre, Paterson, N. J., a three-day house, presented it for six days and advises that 47,039 out of a population of 125,000 viewed the picture, and it broke all records for the house which has played a majority of the greatest features during the last five years. As a result, an arrangement has been made for a return engagement at the Garden Theatre, in Paterson, and Manager Fabian of the First National Exchange advises that he has already booked "Mickey" in fifteen first run houses in his territory for one and two week stands. The Strand Theatre, Newark, broke the house precedents by booking by the Loew circuit in New York for seventy days, while the Eighty-first Street Theatre, New York, is said to have just completed a record-breaking run.

"Mickey" is being exploited in accordance with a far-reaching publicity campaign which includes displays in five and ten cent stores, and music stores for at least a week before the opening, and Tom Moore of Washington, who has booked this picture for New Year's week at his new Rialto Theatre, is said to be taking advantage of the elaborate publicity campaign four weeks in advance of the showing.

CHARLES CHAPMAN is the latest addition to the studio staff assembled for the first "S-L" production starring E. K. Lincoln. Mr. Chapman, who has been appointed art director, is said to be the dean of art directors in the motion picture field, having worked in that capacity with Vitagraph nine years ago. During his long appearance with that organization he was responsible for a great many of the massive sets and decorative work of the big Vitagraph productions.

Mr. Chapman is a man of wide knowledge of technique, and during his connection with the Vitagraph organization was for some time associated with Ralph Ince, who is directing the initial "S-L" feature. Mr. Ince has expressed himself as being particularly delighted with the acquisition of Mr. Chapman, and plans to work out a number of unique and unusual effects in the matter of sets for the initial production.

In addition to Mr. Chapman and the other members of the staff already announced, the officials of "S-L" Pictures have secured the following for service in the studio: Charles Levine, assistant cameraman; Howard Dell, electrician; Joseph Prem, head carpenter, and E. Harris, painter. Bert Lubin has been appointed as studio manager, and the entire force will be under the supervision of Arthur H. Sawyer, one of the officials of the organization.

Rowland and Clark Secure "Woman" for Pennsylvania

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S newest production, "Woman," has been purchased for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia by the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, of Pittsburgh, Pa., which operates the Rowland and Clark theatres' franchise in that section.

Many exhibitors in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia have been requesting Maurice Tourneur open market offerings ever since they played his first production, "The Whip," which is said to have established a box office record, and they have been asking exchanges daily for "Woman." Many of the Pittsburgh exchanges have been negotiating for this production, which has been secured by the Rowland and Clark office, and congratulations have been showered upon Manager Joseph Shirboll.

The initial showing in Pittsburgh has not been definitely decided on, although practically all of the prominent theatres have asked for the privilege of showing "Woman" first in that territory. The advance publicity work will be started immediately, and indications are that the production will be presented with the same success and distinction that S. L. Rothapfel gave "Woman" when he played it at the Rivoli Theatre in New York.

With the announcement of the open market plan for "Woman" hundreds of letters have been coming in from exhibitors and exchange men in all sections of the country, and allotments are being made rapidly by Hiller and Wilk, the selling agents, who will announce the sale of a number of other territories within a few days.

Upton Boys Honor Dolores Cassinelli.

Quite a number of scenes of Leonce Perret's "Stars of Glory" were filmed on the neighborhood of Camp Upton, and Dolores Cassinelli, one of the featured players, Dolores Cassinelli, who before entering the motion picture field, was a singer on the concert stage, frequently visited the camp and helped to entertain the soldiers. As a recognition of their appreciation, the boys of the third battalion, 152d Depot Brigade of the U. S. Army, have forwarded to Miss Cassinelli a certificate appointing her an honorary first lieutenant of the battalion.

Cleveland Likes "Wives of Men."

The Cleveland office of the Pioneer Film Corporation reports that they are doing big business on "Wives of Men," which is going over big with exhibitors, who are enthusiastic in their praise of this production, claiming it is one of the best box office attractions of the season.

The first run on this feature was at Miles Theatre and second run at the Orpheum, both of which are said to be enjoying remarkable business, the outlook being that the box office record of the Orpheum will be broken.

Nathan Hirsh, president of Pioneer Film Corporation, announces that similar reports are being received from all sections of the country, and that only a little territory still remains open on this production.

Billy West Will Appear in Bull's Eye Comedies

THE Bull's Eye Film Corporation, a new producing company, with headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, announces that they will release a number of two-reel comedies which the popular comedian, Billy West, is now producing, and in which he will be the star.

Mr. West is well known to exhibitors and motion picture patrons for his work in comedies, his latest screen appearance having been with the King Bee Film Corporation in a series of Billy West comedies.

The Bull's Eye Corporation will release this series of new productions on state rights basis, and have already disposed of the New England rights to the R. D. Marson Attractions Company, of Boston.

Arrow Reissues Serial Called "The Demon Shadow"

FOLLOWING the announcement made in a recent issue that the "Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" would be reissued, Arrow Film Corporation advises that the new title for this production, which is said to be the first serial ever reissued, will be "The Demon Shadow."

This serial, originally issued in twenty episodes, has been cut down to ten, and has been revised and re-edited. Each episode is in two reels, and Marguerite Snow, James Cruze and Mitchell Lewis are among the principal players.

Concerning this production, Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, of Arrow, says: "We have contracted with the Big Productions Film Corporation, the owners of the United States and Canadian rights, to distribute this serial on state rights basis. The meat of the original plot is retained, together with all of the original sensationalism, eliminating only incidents that today would not appear germane to the subject. Because of the faith of the producers in this reissued production, we are refusing to lease outright territorial franchises, but are distributing the serial on a percentage basis only.

"Reference will be prominently made to the fact that 'The Demon Shadow' is a reissue of the 'Twenty Million Dollar Mystery,' but we are preparing advertising matter to accompany the production as though it were an entirely new release. Out-of-town buyers who called at our office during the past week have not hesitated to sign the franchises, and we have already closed for the following territories: Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina and Tennessee to the Specialty Film Company, of Atlanta; Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia to the Variety Pictures Corporation, of Baltimore; the New England States to the Federal Feature Film Company, of Boston; Greater New York and Northern New Jersey to I. E. Chadwick, of New York; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to the Quaker City Feature Film Co., Inc., of Philadelphia. 'The Demon Shadow' will be released one episode a week commencing December 20, and the advertising in trade magazines to run concurrently with the release."

Portrait of E. K. Lincoln Painted by Famous Artist

AS an example of the efforts of the executives of "S-L" pictures to have all advertising in connection with the productions of this organization high class and distinctive, Clarence Underwood, famous magazine illustrator and an artist of international reputation, was engaged to paint a portrait of E. K. Lincoln, the star, a reproduction of which in colors appeared in the advertising section of our last issue.

It is planned by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin to make further use of this painting when the first "S-L" production directed by Ralph Ince is presented to the public. Various ideas are now under consideration in order to determine the most effective way in which it can be employed as an effective aid for exhibitors in attracting the attention of patrons by using it in their lobbies and in other ways.

It is further announced that unusual beauty and impressive effects will be a distinctive feature of all of the exploitation matter employed in connection with the Ralph Ince attractions distributed by "S-L" Pictures.

Make Final Arrangements for "Stars of Glory"

ANNOUNCEMENT from the offices of the Perret Productions indicates that Leonce Perret, who has been at work for some months on "Stars of Glory," which features Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, has completed the production, and that arrangements for its premiere presentation are in progress. Adolphe Osso, who has been assigned to negotiate the release of the production, and who will handle the exploitation of the contemplated Broadway showing, has already contracted for a prominent electrical display on Broadway advertising the attraction.

Although there has been no announcement as to the nature of the story of the play, the insertion of the subtitles, which is all that remains to complete the production, offers some inkling as to the nature of the story. It has to do with a phase of the war that has not heretofore appeared on the screen, and yet is by no means a war film in the strictest sense of the word. The action is laid, and alternates, between France and America during the last stages of the war, and parallels the era of victory and peace with an adventure-romance of the sea.

That its subject is timely may be gleaned from one of the titles, "As the Curtain Rings Down on the Last Act of History's Greatest Drama an Audience of One Hundred Millions in Mightier Acclaim Greets the Victorious Heroes, 'The Stars of Glory'." Definite announcement concerning the theatre in which the production will be presented on Broadway and the consummation of the releasing arrangements for the film will be made very shortly.

"TREAT 'EM ROUGH"

William Fox Presents Tom Mix in Ripping Five-Reel Drama of the Great West.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN certain important respects this five-reel subject, "Treat 'Em Rough," sets a new high water mark for Western dramas. It is built from the ground up, as the saying goes, and contains much that will amuse and astonish observers. It conveys a sense of authority in every scene.

Tom Mix, whose previous good work in "Ace High," "Cupid's Round-Up" and other numbers has made him favorably known, has the leading role, that of a two-gun man named Ned Ferguson. Ned has a breezy way with "wimen and hosses," and some of the stunts he accomplishes are truly unusual. In one instance he performs the extremely hazardous job of bulldogging a steer for the purpose of splitting a stampede of cattle, incidentally saving his own life and that of the heroine. The stampede and accompanying prairie fire are brilliantly staged, and reflect great credit on all concerned.

Subtitles, of which there are many, play an important part in this frontier yarn. They are true to plot and characterization, and contain many an additional gleam of good humor. They read as though they might have been judiciously selected from the original novel by Charles Alden Seltzer. If so, the practice should be followed more frequently, for these subtitles have a freshness of their own, and are not mere explanatory lines thrown in for the sake of continuity.

Jane Novak plays the part of the heroine in good style; Charles LeMoyne makes an interesting villain, and Val Paul plays the heroine's brother.

This successful subject, which is "big" and reflects the West in every department in what may be called a grand scale, was adapted and directed by Lynn Reynolds, with photography by J. Dev. Jennings.

"THE KEY TO POWER"

Educational Production Veers from Graver Vein of First Intention to Entertaining Drama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN MAKING the Educational Films Corporation of America's six-part feature production, "The Key to Power," their first, by the way, William Parke, director of the picture, was up against a peculiar situation, which he handled with skill. The production was intended primarily to tell the story of the giant power of coal, and those who were looking forward to this particular angle of the picture, are going to be somewhat disappointed. The story on which it was based has veered from its original intent and entered the ordinary channel of entertaining drama, in which Claire Adams makes a pleasing heroine, with Hugh Thompson maintaining well the dignity of the male lead. In the support, among whom are some who molded themselves into tremendously interesting and appropriate types, are J. H. Gilmour, Frazier Nounnan, Tom Burrough, Fred Radcliffe, George Pauncefort, Stephen Grattan, L. F. Kennedy and J. J. Dunn.

The story of the picture was written by Caroline Gentray and E. Lloyd Sheldon, and many of its scenes were laid in the vicinity of the Allegheny coal mines, West Virginia. The plot of the story concerns a German conspiracy to cripple the coal output of the United States by creating dissension among the miners and by bribing the head of the railroad which was responsible for the delivery of the coal, to withhold its cars. This situation itself, occurring during the period of the war, held a wealth of dramatic quality that required the romance which the authors of the story have worked into it only for the satisfaction of the more sentimental spectator.

This romance occurs between a Virginia girl and the son of the manager of the mines, a West Point graduate. The father of the young man, who has been injured by a framed automobile accident, extracts from him a promise to give up his commission in the army and fight the big fight of the coal industry for the interests of his country and its Allies. The girl, indignant at his seeming negligence of duty, breaks off her engagement with him, and not until the fight is won and her little brother the victim of an attempt to destroy the central power house is rescued by her lover, does she realize the worth of the man who really gave up all that was dear to him to serve his country.

Our nearness to a situation which may in truth have existed, and the thrilling qualities of the problem on which the production is based, should provide the picture with an excellent selling asset apart from other commendable features which it contains.

"THE LIGHTNING RAIDER"

Pathe Ready with Another Pearl White Serial—And It's a Corker.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

VERY likely there will always be serials while screens last and "to-be-continued" holds suspense for the public in either pictured or printed stories. But, sure it is, if Pearl White could play in more serials of as bright and interesting texture as "The Lightning Raider" there would be less opposition to picture-serials in the minds of some theatregoers and in the disposition of certain exhibitors. For in the three episodes that were shown at the New York Roof recently, when exhibitors and newspaper persons were invited, there is some of the best and most engaging entertainment the screen has ever offered.

Two excellent reasons led to this expression of opinion—Pearl White, for one, and the way Pearl White does things. Then, too, there is the story. Without seemingly disarranging a hairpin Pearl White does "stunts" that truly amaze, turns the corner of a predicament in a twinkling and flashes into a new situation like lightning. From "stunt" to "thrill" she passes like a squirrel in a hurry; there's no stopping her. She's as "sure-fire" as a Marine.

In doing wild and daring deeds in "The Lightning Raider" the producers have cleared the track of all ridiculous subterfuges like electrified gazooks, masked moguls, haunted horrors or terrifying tanks. Thrills comes seemingly unbidden; trapdoors yawn logically; breakaway furniture precipitates the daring Pearl into perfectly natural dangers, and the eye keeps the mind tensely occupied in following along the speedway Miss White's travels across the screen.

She doubles into amazing disguises, swings into wild swirls as she scales the walls of a building or descends a waterspout into unscheduled dangers. And when she is flashed in a "close-up," the spectator gazes on a million dollars worth of woman; magnetic, pretty, and for all the world as beguiling as the most raging beauty of fact or fiction.

Besides Pearl White, her "stunts," and the story there is a supporting company to speed along the complications adeptly and with skill. In Warner Oland there is a villain most insidious, insinuative and hissable; Henry Gsell is the hero, and is athletic, good looking and agile as an aid in all of Miss White's adventures, encounters and thrills. The settings are what may be safely described as lavish. The trick-stuff works well and is skilfully intrenched where the plot-detectives will find difficulty in locating it.

Let not this much of praise of Pearl White and "The Lightning Raider" be assigned to overenthusiasm. Play the first episodes and patrons will (like children reaching for a certain sweet nostrum) "cry for it." It's a corker—and great is Pearl White.

"THE PRICE OF VICTORY"

Pictures of Recent War Show a Bit of England's Share in Victory.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

AMONG the scurvy deeds of the House of Hohenzollern was, it will be remembered, an effort to incite mutiny in India, using the United States as the starting point of a far-reaching plot. At the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, Sunday evening, December 8, the screen bore witness of failure, to a certain very great extent, of this plot to rob England of the man-power of a great host of East Indians who participated in victory on the Western front. Six reels of "The Price of Victory" were shown as a part of the celebration of "British Day," which extended throughout our land on the date given.

The Arrow Film Company sent out the invitations that called representatives of the trade press to see these amazing pictures—for they are really amazing in many particulars. Taken on the battle-front, behind the lines and in actual combat, they represent, in many ways, one of the most remarkable contributions of war pictures to the screen. Because of several stirring speeches made to mark the occasion, and a couple of vaudeville specialties thrown in for too good measure, the screening of the picture was first delayed and then interrupted. Vastly more satisfactory would it have been to see the six reels run off without these "intervals."

The greater part of the films were devoted to the East Indians and their strange rites and customs, both in and out of battle. Perhaps the pictures might be reassembled into a faster and more "showmanlike" display. But when it came to pictured dangers, stress of assaults and thrills of actual battle, "The Price of Victory" will be hard to beat. What will become of them, insofar as exhibitors may be concerned, is still undecided, according to our information. How they will be released, or when this will be done, remains unannounced. But when the time comes, the exhibitor who plays this offering will have a novelty of intense appeal and unquestion wide interest.

Dr. H. D. Gridwood made the pictures, braving great danger to do so, as plainly shows in many incidents. The doctor "lectured" on the films Sunday night in an interesting if somewhat too loquacious manner.

"WILD HONEY"

Youthful and Pretty Doris Kenyon Star of Stirring Picture of Western Life.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THERE is good entertainment in "Wild Honey" for film devotees who like stirring action, youthful charm and a moral that comes without being ground in by cumbersome titles. The 5,675 feet of story and action passed remarkably quick before the screen at Miles' Simplex Theatre the other day. To the average person this fact would indicate interesting entertainment, and that's just what, in this opinion, "Wild Honey" provides.

Doris Kenyon, star of this structure, prepared by Louis Joseph Vance, from Vingie E. Roe's magazine story, looks too sweet and refined to idealize the character of the dance-hall belle she impersonates. But that may be the fault of our imagination; it may be the shortcomings of other dance-hall queens we have seen "ruling the roost" in photodramas, or it may be our natural desire to give beauty the best of it in surroundings we would not, willingly, commit her to. Be all this as it may, and Miss Kenyon being thus cast, perhaps it were better to go a little into the story, synopsis-like.

A young clergyman has asked an actress to become his wife. If a clergyman had popped this question to a milliner, a dressmaker or one of the many girls who sell candy we might not have had the picture. But, being an actress and he a clergyman, the woman thus invited to share parish life with a rising young priest halted him with an off-hand opinion that marriage to her might be a handicap in his profession. Both having confidence in an older, and, presumably, more maturely minded priest, they go to this counsellor and he tells them the story of "Wild Honey," while his life-mate sits near and listens.

A "fighting parson" in a mining camp aroused the enmity of Wild Honey, queen of the El Dorado dance hall, because he continually pointed his exhortations at her. There were many admirers of Wild Honey among the camp-followers, but she had never favored any of them particularly. As time passed Wild Honey loved the "fighting parson," but chose his humiliation as her strange way of showing affection.

The minister openly reciprocates Wild Honey's love, and after many tribulations, a threatened lynching, wild riding and strenuous scenes in the dance hall and elsewhere in the vicinity, Wild Honey makes herself the shield for a bullet intended for the parson, and he bears her away in his arms to a new life in the more quiet environs of New England.

"I can see no reason," finally says the aged clergyman, "why a minister and an actress may not marry provided they really, truly and surely love each other. Come to me when you have secured your marriage license."

For audiences that like quick action, rugged characters, a pretty and talented star and other essentials of a good "Western" offering, "Wild Honey" will come as a refreshing entertainment.

"PERFECTLY FIENDISH FLANAGAN"

James Montgomery Flagg the Star of His Own Two-Reel Paramount-Flagg Comedy.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A BOAD burlesque is the treatment given James Montgomery Flagg's two-reel satirical comedy, "Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan," produced by Paramount. The picture also bears the subtitle of "The Hart of the Dreadful West," and the leading character is a travesty of the bad man as personated by the screen's own and only William S. Hart.

The fun of the satire is fairly amusing, but it jogs along at an uneven pace. Writing burlesque for moving pictures is about the most difficult branch of screen authorship. There is little that is novel in "Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan," and it is further handicapped by having the leading character played by the author of the scenario. James Montgomery Flagg is a very good amateur actor and looks surprisingly like the man he burlesques, but his work is far below that of the ordinary professional. The proper amount of professional training is quite as necessary in his case as in that of any other aspirant to serious consideration as an actor.

Olin Howland as Dirk Mendez, Ruby De Reamer as Phoebe Slush and Sally Long as Uneeda are the leading members of the supporting company.

"STRING BEANS"

Paramount Presents Charles Ray in His Favorite Role of the Country Boy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

BACK again to the role he impersonates without a rival, Charles Ray is thoroughly at home in his interpretation of the timid, faltering, hard-working and honest country boy who comes to his own, including a pretty girl, by his willingness to make his way at anything he can turn his hand to, and by the unalterable sincerity of his nature. The story starts him as a rustic poet, struggling as a farm hand amid almost impossible circumstances these days, when the farmer is a very different man from the traditional stage concept. The rustic poet is persecuted to the point that he leaves in rags and lands up in the newspaper office of a neighboring town, whose struggling editor is staggered by an application for a position on the force as "poet." He gives the country boy a job collecting bills, and he advances by degrees until he becomes a factor in preventing some get-rich-quick swindlers from establishing a fake cannery for string beans.

At a public meeting, where the subject is to be discussed, the old editor expects to make the oratorical effect of his life to oppose the scheme, but his health breaks down at the last minute, and he delegates the efficient country boy to address the meeting. What the boy passes through in his vain attempt to address the assemblage is an exceptionally fine example of psychology, his every secret misery clearly depicted on his face and by his gestures. The audience roars, all but one pitying girl. Through the agency of this girl and the country boy the act of villainy, which reaches the holdup stage, is prevented, and their little love story is the means of saving her father from being seriously victimized. While the story does not advance much beyond the conventional lines, the impersonation is, in some respects, an improvement on what Ray has done before. It should prove amusing to almost any audience.

"CODE OF THE YUKON."

Select Picture Presents Mitchell Lewis as Hero of Northwestern Romance.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN "Code of the Yukon," a Select picture fashioned from a story by Anthony Paul Kelly, the star, Mitchell Lewis, is given an opportunity to portray his favorite screen character, a primitive man of the twentieth century. The author of the story has taken his measure cleverly, and Jean Dubois calls for the qualities that have made Mitchell Lewis' work so well liked in "The Barrier" and "The Bar Sinister." The simple nature, fearless honesty and kind heart of his other creations are found in his first starring venture, and his admirers will undoubtedly welcome his domination of the plot and follow the history of Jean with close interest.

"Code of the Yukon" is not the best effort of Anthony Paul Kelly. The story spreads itself over too much ground, and the final reel finds such a collection of motives to explain and round off that the entire structure is weakened. New characters are brought in just before the close and occupy space that should have been given to the men and women already introduced. Another bad piece of construction is in trying to utilize two personalities so nearly alike as Dan Cregan and "Faro" Telford. It is difficult at times to keep them separated and remember the exact connection each of them has with the plot. Compactness is an art that the screen author should study with care. Bertram Bracken, who directed the picture, also made the scenario and is, therefore, partly to blame for the loose jointed nature of the story. The general production, including cast and scenic possibilities, is excellent.

The main points of "Code of the Yukon" tell of Jean's hunt for the man who ruined his sister. At the opening, the French Canadian is living alone in the wilderness and working a claim that will give him the gold he needs to carry out his vengeance. The arrival of other miners leads to Jean's marriage to the daughter of an unsuccessful prospector. An attempt to steal Jean's mine and the running away of his wife are among the leading situations of the story. Before the end comes, Jean discovers the man he has sworn to punish, and the two have a furious struggle. The villain is killed by the hand of fate, and Jean's wife comes back to him and is forgiven.

Tom Santschi as Dan Cregan, Arthur Morrison as "Faro" Telford, William Effee as Father Paul, Jack McDonald as Justice Breen, Franklyn Hall as Dave Crawford, Vivian Rich as Lola Crawford, Margaret Landis as Dorothy Noland, and Goldie Caldwell as "Goldie" complete the cast. Photography by Joseph Brotherton.

"THE ROAD THROUGH THE DARK."

Clara Kimball Young the Heroine of Select Story That Will Arouse Different Opinions.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WHEN Maud Radford Warren wrote "The Road Through the Dark" she built her plot on a situation that is bound to arouse a difference of opinion as to whether its use is justified by the author. No one will deny its dramatic value. In order to help her country, by sying on the enemy, a young French girl becomes the mistress of a German officer, goes to Berlin with him and lives openly with him for three years. At the end of that time he discovers her rifling his desk, and she kills him in the struggle that ensues. Produced by Clara Kimball Young and her own company and released on the Select program, the picture has been adequately directed by Edmund Mortimer and given the benefit of a thoroughly competent cast. Its construction brings out the points of the story clearly and with strong dramatic effect.

Kathryn Stuart made the scenario. She has introduced one incident that will not be accepted by loyal Americans. No one who has followed the history of the German war lords in the present conflict is going to believe that His Highness, Duke Karl of Streilitz, was instructed by his superiors to stop all killing and unnecessary violence in the town that he had captured and where his soldiers are shown shooting down defenseless men and women and outraging young girls. The sooner this misleading incident is cut out, the better for the picture.

According to the scenario, when the Duke receives this communication he tells the young French girl, who has just seen her aunt and little brother murdered and her young sister attacked by a brute of a Hun, that he has been instructed not to spare anyone in the village, but that she can save them all at the price of her honor. Gabrielle consents, and for three years conceals her loathing of him so skillfully that the duke never suspects his victim is not deeply in love with him. After killing the duke Gabrielle escapes across the border and joins her American lover, with whom she has kept up a correspondence in code that betrayed valuable secrets to the Allies.

Clara Kimball Young plays Gabrielle with her usual artistic grasp and dramatic strength. Jack Holt, as the duke, is fully entitled to his position as leading support. The other characters are played by Henry Woodward as John Morgan, Eleanor Fair as Marie Louise, Bobby Connolly as Georges, John Steppling as Antoine Jardee, Lillian Leighton as Louise Jardee, Elmo Lincoln as Private Schultz, Edward M. Kimball as Father Alphonse, and Eugenie Besserer as Aunt Julie. Arthur Edeson was the photographer.

"AND A STILL SMALL VOICE"

National Film Production Starring Henry Walthall Is Based on Christian Science.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE commercial value of "And a Still Small Voice," a six-part picture produced by the National Film Corporation, with Henry Walthall starred, is bound to suffer from having the plot hinge on Christian Science. Followers of Mary Baker Eddy may be willing to accept the supernatural power attributed to her teachings, but the general public will not be so ready to believe in the way the hero is induced to abandon a life of crime.

The story starts off promisingly, but soon loses its hold on probability, and the spectator is treated to a hero who sees his sweetheart married to his rival, and then turns "Raffles" and uses the profits of his profession to set the lady's husband on his financial feet, when that speculative person goes broke playing the stock market. At another time the hero, who is received in excellent society and takes advantage of the fact, applies his knowledge of safe cracking to the saving of the heroine's good name.

A wealthy collector of rare gems attempts to force his attentions on Mrs. Dunlap, who, with her husband, is among the guests at a house party. Finding himself repulsed, the collector removes a necklace from his safe with the intention of fastening its theft on the woman he covets. Clay Randolph, the society expert, steals the jewels from their owner, opens the safe, and puts them back where they belong. When the collector goes to show his other guests how he has been robbed, the necklace is discovered resting safely in its case in the safe.

Opening in the South, the action shows how Randolph lost his sweetheart, and how he was tricked into robbing the bank where he was assistant cashier by his rival. Bertram Bracken directed the picture. The acting and production are satisfactory. Henry B. Walthall is a mature but forceful hero, and Fritzi Brunette is an attractive Mary Singleton. George Fisher as Richard Dunlap and Joseph Dowling as Colonel Robert Singleton are among the leading members of the cast.

"And a Still Small Voice" is controlled by Robertson-Cole Company, and distributed through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

"WANTED FOR MURDER"

Harry Rapf Presents Elaine Hammerstein in Realistic War Story in Five Reels.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A SIMPLE and effective war story in five reels is presented by Harry Rapf in this number entitled "Wanted for Murder." It abounds in realism of an intense sort, and running all through the production are touches of pathos which keeps it human and appealing. The story, which was written by S. Jay Kaufman and directed by Frank H. Crane, consists of a series of episodes built around the experiences of an American soldier and a French girl. The construction is loose, and turns upon the natural course of events themselves, in which it gains rather than loses as a picture of war.

Charles Raven is cast as the hero, Dick, and Elaine Hammerstein as Corinne Frenaud. Both are excellent types and thoroughly representative of "Our Hero" and "Our Girl" as they are referred to in the subtitles. In the supporting cast are Mrs. Walker as Mme. Frenard, Lillian Hall as Annette and Capt. Darby Holmes as himself. A fine company of Yanks assisted in this, and it was a pleasing touch to show actual pictures of Irene Franklin and Burton Green amusing the boys behind the lines.

There are few preliminaries in this offering. The hero is seen leaving his mother in America, and the action quickly plunges into warfare in France. Dick is injured by a shell, and wanders into the German lines. Here he finds temporary safety with Mme. Frenaud and her daughters. There is a battle near the cottage between the Yanks and the Germans, in which the former come off victorious. But later the Germans counter attack and take the cottage, killing Mme. Frenaud and making Annette captive. Dick and Corinne escape, and the story of their adventures thereafter is very interesting.

The number may be recommended as a characteristic picture of the great war with an entertaining narrative included.

"THE LOVE NET."

Five-Reel World Picture Features Madge Evans in a Delightful Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel story, "The Love Net," written by Bertha A. Backus and ably directed by Tefft Johnson, is one that will undoubtedly prove acceptable to audiences everywhere. It has the broad, general interest of a novel, and is full of fine sentiment and humor. The narrative itself resembles somewhat in its outlines the splendid Cape Cod stories by Joseph C. Lincoln, inasmuch as three old salts play a conspicuous part in it.

Madge Evans has the juvenile role of Patty Barnes, grand-daughter of Captain Amos Barnes, retired. She is a child of the seacoasts, and spends her play hours with a band of boys who love to dress as pirates; the girl is known to the band as "Pirate Patty."

The chief love of her life is her devoted grandfather and the memory of her father, who has gone to war and is killed during the course of the story. Then a wealthy lady living near the Barnes cabin offers to adopt Patty, and the grandfather reluctantly consents. He, himself, goes to the poor house.

Much of the humor of the piece, which is very good, grows out of Patty's experiences at the home of her foster mother. She rips open a mattress to find hair with which to supply whiskers to her pirate band. She then tries to repair the damage by stuffing the mattress with feathers from a pillow, with disastrous results. This, and the scene where the young pirates duck the governess in the ocean, are two of the best humorous moments. But the story has in addition a strong heart interest, and has been excellently produced. It can safely be recommended for its all-around interest.

The supporting cast consists of Jack Drumier, Charles Sutton and W. T. Carleton as the three old salts, whose story in itself is very entertaining; Kate Lester as Mrs. Gaythorne, Charles Ascott, Blanche Craig, Sam Ryan, Charles Jackson, Nora Cecil, Estar Banks and Kathleen Blackburn. Clara S. Beranger wrote the continuity.

"SHE HIRED A HUSBAND"

Five-Reel Bluebird Subject Features Priscilla Dean in Imaginative Yarn.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

PRISCILLA DEAN, while always a flashing and interesting personality, has not been quite so fortunate in her medium in this story written by Rex Taylor and directed by Jack Dillon as in some previous releases. It is a preposterous yarn in many respects, and one not rendered entirely convincing. At the same time it moves freely, and contains many picturesque sets and scenic effects, all beautifully pictured, so that on the whole it comes under the head of very acceptable entertainment.

The heroine, Daphne Trowbridge, is a perverse girl who lives on a fine country estate with her aunt and uncle. When Mrs. Trowbridge instructs the gardener to plant a shrub in a certain location, the girl immediately directs him to plant it elsewhere. The aunt politely insists, and so does the girl, but they always manage to smooth things over without a quarrel, Daphne usually getting her way.

Daphne falls in love with a handsome young fellow named Tom Dunstan, but when her aunt openly indorses the match the girl throws Tom overboard. The aunt then opposes Chauncey DePeyster's suit, and Daphne welcomes him with open arms. But on the eve of the wedding, with the bridesmaids and best man all in waiting, Daphne learns that her aunt really likes DePeyster, and she then runs away and marries a common lumberman. The latter turns out to be Tom Dunstan, disguised in a beard he raised while in the lumber camps. He later steals Daphne away to his cabin, and teaches her to love him in true cave-man style. This story, we imagine, will have particular appeal to matinee girls who like a light, romantic love interest above all else in a story.

Pat O'Malley appears as Tom Dunstan, and others in the cast are Marian Skinner, Frederick Vroom, F. A. Turner, Charles Gerrard, Sam Appell and Harry Todd.

"THE BELOVED IMPOSTER"

Gladys Leslie Does Neat Child Impersonation in Lightweight Love Story Produced by Vitagraph.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONCE again are Cinderella and her prince brought to life. "The Beloved Imposter," a five-part love story written by Mrs. Elizabeth J. Marian and produced by Vitagraph, with Gladys Leslie as the heroine, is one of those never-did-happen affairs that often prove entertaining for all that. If the spectator is not difficult to please and relishes a modern fairy tale where the lovers are left at the finish with every prospect of wedded bliss he will enjoy this picture. At any rate, his wife or his best girl will. All that is necessary to this end is a confiding and trusting spirit, and a willingness to accept the author's statement that a man of average intelligence is completely taken in by a pert young woman of eighteen, when said young woman gets herself into the knee length frock, cute little socks and slippers of a twelve-year old girl and has curls and manners to match.

Dick Mentor, who turned woman-hater after his wife ran away with another man, is made the subject of a bet by Betty, who becomes the beloved imposter. She wagered that she can make Mentor fall in love with her, and discovers that Cupid has turned the tables on her by making her a victim of the tender passion herself.

The masquerading as a sweet innocent of twelve is a trap to break down Mentor's reserve, and he walks straight into it. He sees no danger in caressing the bright-eyed youngster, who insists on kissing him good night, until he finds out that he is growing very fond of her. When Miss Betty does up her hair and lets down her skirts and shows him how he has been fooled, Mentor picks her up and carries her off to his cabin in the woods. Here he storms at Betty in a great rage for playing with him, until she puts her arms about his neck and owns up she's just as hard hit as he.

Gladys Leslie hasn't forgotten how to play kid parts, even if she is rather long of limb for the cute little socks. Huntley Gordon as Dick Mentor, Denton Vane as Hugh, Mrs. Huntley as Aunt Jessie, Frances Grant as Mammy and Gwen Willians as Gertrude complete a fair cast. Joseph Gleason directed the picture. The incident of Mentor's wife running away was not too well handled, but things improve a great deal during the rest of the story.

TWO TOM MIX TWO-REELERS

Exclusive Features, Inc., Reissues "Twisted Trails" and "The Man Within."

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

BY arrangement with William N. Selig, Exclusive Features, Inc., is reissuing under the original titles sixteen two-reel pictures featuring Tom Mix in Western subjects. The first two, "Twisted Trails" and "The Man Within," augur well for the success of the series, and should fit well in houses desiring short length dramatic subjects.

Both of these pictures are full of action, and, while they are somewhat lacking in continuity judged by the standards of today, there is also a conspicuous absence of padding. The stories are interesting, and the star performs several stunts.

In "Twisted Trails" the story deals with a cowboy accused of being a rustler, who meets a girl who has fled after shooting a man who attacked her. A romance follows, and the couple are led by a photograph to believe they are brother and sister. This is straightened out, however, by the hospital nurse, who confesses she substituted her own son for one of the babies. Bessie Eyton is well cast as the girl.

"The Man Within" tells of a man with too strong a fondness for drink. He marries the daughter of a wealthy rancher, who casts her off. A baby is born, and soon after the hero goes away to another ranch. The baby is taken sick and dies, and as the father cannot be found, as he has let temptation get the best of him, the mother, disheartened, accepts a position as cook in a questionable dance hall, where she is insulted. She managers to escape, and meets her husband, who rescues her, and he overcomes the craving which has nearly wrecked his happiness. Victoria Forde appears in the principal feminine role.

Tom Mix does good work in both of these offerings, and there are several excellent riding scenes.

"IRISH EYES."

Pauline Starke Gives Correct Characterization in Triangle Picture of the "Ould Sod."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

OPENING with a vivid picture of fisherfolk life on the coast of Ireland, the latest Triangle production, "Irish Eyes," written by Catherine Carr and Daniel Carson Goodman, turns into a love romance of the conventional type. Pauline Starke as Pegeen, the ill-treated daughter of a fisherman, gives a correct characterization of the girl and brings her own vibrant personality to the aid of the story. The outdoor scenes along the coast are excellent imitations of the real thing, and William Dowlan has directed the production skillfully.

A heavy-handed stepmother makes life miserable for Pegeen, and when her father is killed in a drunken brawl, the girl is found on the seashore by Sir Arthur Ormsby, half crazed with grief. The nobleman learns her story and takes her to his castle, in company with a blind friend of her's named Jerry O'Flynn. Sir Arthur's brother, Guy, who has led a fast life and become entangled in an affair with a music hall singer, arrives at the castle and starts in to make love to Pegeen. The lord of the castle loves the girl himself, but the arrival of the actress involves him in a false position, and Peg is made to think that he has victimized the woman. Everything is smoothed out at the finish, and the bare-legged fisher girl becomes a lady of title.

The supporting cast is capable and consists of Ward Caufield as O'Barry, Virginia Ware as Moll, Gus Saville as Jerry O'Flynn, Joe King as Sir Arthur, Eugene Burr as Guy Ormsby, and Rae Godfrey as Kitty Brice. Elgin Lesley was the photographer.

COMMENTS

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

SET FREE (Bluebird)—A five-reel light comedy offering, adapted by Rex Taylor from a story by James P. Poland, and directed by Tod Browning. Edith Roberts plays the part of a high-spirited girl who runs away to become a gypsy. The plot is slight, but quite agreeable, and Miss Roberts makes the most of her opportunities. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Exhibitors' Mutual.

THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS (Exhibitors' Mutual)—This five-reel offering marks the initial apearance of Billie Rhodes as a feature star. It is an entertaining production, although somewhat lacking in suspense, and has one or two angles that many will not like, particularly between the girl and the villain, who is her father. The star is delightful and there is quite a lot of good comedy.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

STRING BEANS (Paramount)—A comedy of the country boy, with Charles Ray in his favorite role, an awkward young farmer who breaks away from monotony and restraint and makes his way in love and finance by eager sincerity and strenuous work. His attempt to make a speech in public is one of the most natural and amusing episodes of its kind ever shown.

GOOD-BYE, BILL (Paramount)—A new John Emerson-Anita Loos production, starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, the story is a broad burlesque of the ex-Kaiser and his court. It is reviewed at length in last week's issue.

PERFECTLY FIENDISH FLANAGAN (Paramount-Flagg) — James Montgomery Flagg is the author and star actor of this two-part satire which pokes fun at the western bad man. The picture is fairly amusing. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

HITTING THE HIGH SPOTS (Fox)—A very laughable "Mutt and Jeff" number. This shows Mutt conducting a screen review of the moving pictures of himself and Jeff climbing Mt. Blanc. It contains a great deal of first-class burlesque humor and is highly entertaining.

TREAT 'EM ROUGH (Fox)—A "top notch" western subject, full of humor and thrills, with Tom Mix in the leading role, aslsted by Jane Novak, Charles Le Moyne, Vai Paul and Jack Curtis. The subject, which was adapted and directed by Lynn Reynolds, is remarkable in many respects and a thoroughly workmanlike production. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE NEW CHAMPION (Fox)—Another very successful "Mutt and Jeff" number, showing these two worthies watching a game of billiards. The game played by the elderly gentleman with the whiskers is very funny and the subject will appeal particularly to persons who know the fine points of billiards.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE COMMON CAUSE (Blackton)—J. Stuart Blackton's seven-part war drama is an entertaining mixture of thrills and laughs, finely played and produced. Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer head the cast. A longer review was printed in last week's issue.

THE MAN WHO WOULD NOT TELL (Vitagraph)—Earle Williams and Grace Darmond are the featured players in this five-part romance that has the war as a distant background. The picture was directed by James Young, and is the regulation Earle Williams release. It is given a longer review in last week's issue.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

THE CHALLENGE ACCEPTED (W. W. Hodkinson Corporation)—A view of the effect of the army draft in the whiskey-distilling mountains of the south, with some glimpses of camp life, with the story of a country girl who parts from her country lover and a fight between draft slackers and a posse of citizens who capture them.

National Film Corporation.

AND A STILL SMALL VOICE (National Film Corporation)—Christian Science is introduced in this six-part picture starring Henry Walthall. The story is not very convincing, but has been well produced and acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

LIBERTY'S TRIUMPH (Pathe)—This compact, one-reel subject gives a brief history of America's part in the war. This is accomplished by a series of wonderfully interesting pictures relative to various phases of the conflict. It makes an informing subject and one that holds the attention closely.

TAKE A CHANCE (Rolin-Pathe)—A comic number, featuring Harold Lloyd, assisted by Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Bebe is a slavey and Harold takes her to a picnic, where they have some funny experiences. Harold finally gets into a clash with the police. The number is amusing.

WHEN WOMAN WARS (Pathe)—Episode No. 10 of "Wolves of Kultur." This number does not advance the plot action greatly and there are no moments of particular intensity. It deals with the further adventures of Barclay as helper to the spies in the cave and with Bob and Alice shadowing Walker and his accomplices. Alice invades his premises, pretending to be a German sympathizer, but is recognized and made captive.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, No. 24 (Pathe)—Tanks of all sizes in action lead this number. The big new feature, however, pictures the flame throwers at work, giving an illustration of fighting with the deadly liquid fire. This alone is a great feature, and the number has others of interest.

WINNING THE WAR (Pathe)—This number, by the Committee on Public Information, gives an amazing insight into the way in which our men overseas were fed during the war. The loading of a great transport in 48 hours is a memorable feature out of many others.

THE LIGHTNING RAIDER (Pathe)—This is Pearl White's new serial. If every "continued" were so well contrived and well acted by star and cast as "The Lightning Raider" every theatre would play serials as regularly as they do news weeklies and comedies. It may be that serials are a business averson of scores of exhibitors because their patrons have been filled up with "spooky" nonsense too often found in the continued stories of the screen. If such be the case Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider" will do much to rehabilitate this style of screen entertainment for many exhibitors. The first three episodes provide the best possible screen entertainment—a pretty woman doing daring things; good support, adequate settings, an interesting story, and thrill after thrill.

Select Pictures Corporation.

CODE OF THE YUKON (Select)—Written by Anthony Paul Kelly, this five-part story of the Northwest presents Mitchell Lewis as a star in the character he has made his own on the screen—the good-natured French Canadian who fights like a cave man in defense of a woman. The plot is overstocked with incident and characters, but the picture is acted by an excellent cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE ROAD THROUGH THE DARK (Select)—Clara Kimball Young is the heroine of this five-part picture, which tells of a young French girl who becomes the mistress of a German officer in order to save the women and girls of a small town from violence. The story is very dramatic. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

William L. Sherry, Inc.

WILD HONEY (De Luxe)—Doris Kenyon is seen in a stirring Western story filled with exciting adventure, mainly located in a dance hall and saloon, typical of screen pictures of Western mining camps. There is a "fighting parson" to serve as foil for Miss Kenyon's operations as the "queen of the camp" and a large supporting company, operating in picturesque locations, supplement the dramatic element with wild riding and sensational episodes. Miss Kenyon is a young and pretty girl who makes the dance-hall belle a decidedly attractive creature, despite her surroundings. For audiences that fancy stirring "Westerns" here is a play to satisfy all concerned—the exhibitor, because his patrons will be pleased, and theatregoers, because they are given the type of smashing, dashing Western life that screens like red-blooded entertainment—and is just that.

Triangle Film Corporation.

IRISH EYES (Triangle)—Pauline Starke plays a bare-legged fisher girl who marries a nobleman in this five-part romance. The story is conventional, but has a romantic atmosphere and is well acted by the entire cast. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Company.

DANGER—GO SLOW! (Universal Special)—A five-reel production, by Robert Leonard and Mae Murray, which features the latter as a girl, in boy's clothes, who escapes from a band of crooks in New York and finds herself in a small town. The subject is one of the most human and interesting in which Mae Murray has appeared, and succeeds well in spite of some weak spots in construction. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

CAMPING OUT (Star Comedy)—A very good Lyons and Moran number, in which Eddie and Lee go on a camping trip, accompanied by their wives. The trip begins quietly enough, but the presence of a hoot owl, some coyotes, a black bear, a pair of lions and other disturbing elements, including the weather, bring plenty of trouble with them. A very desirable number.

DON'T WEAKEN (Lyons-Moran)—A pleasing comedy subject, in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear as a ranch foreman and his assistant. The girl owner of the ranch appears with her girl friends. The boys threaten to quit, but all eventually fall in love and decide to remain. A good comedy number.

THE CABBAGE QUEEN (Century)—A two-reel comic, with Alice Howell, Hughie Mack and Phil Dunham in the cast. Small incidents of a typical knockabout sort are the chief features of this—a stork, a duck, a goat and an airplane appear. The plot, such as it is, concerns the efforts of a German spy to get the secret of making sauerkraut. This will bring numerous smiles.

ROUGH ON HUSBANDS (L-KO)—A pleasing two-reel comic, with Harry Mann, Merta Sterling and Eddie Barry in the cast. This has a lot of fun with the moving-day troubles of the Fish family. Later come a series of mixups between the new neighbors, which will get a number of laughs. This is a good subject.

LET'S FIGHT (Nester)—A clever little domestic comedy, with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in the leading roles. They start out as two blissful newlyweds, but soon learn to quarrel through the interference of another couple. The dog and cat furnish several laughs in this.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS, No. 3 (Universal Serial)—This contains some stirring situations, among them the effort to blow up the cabin in which Dynamite Dan was hidden, in order to prevent him from testifying in court. Eddie saves Dan in the nick of time. Nan joins the circus in this number and Eddie has a battle at the close with an escaped lion.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS, No. 4 (Universal Serial)—Circus acts are an interesting feature of this number, but the plot again begins working when Eddie discovers where his father is held prisoner and goes to the rescue. He fights single-handed with the gang, but succeeds in releasing his father. In the final scene Eddie leaps from a moving train into a river.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS, No. 5 (Universal Serial)—In this interesting instalment Eddie and his father surprise the plotters by showing up with the payment on the oil lease, just in time to prevent Harden and his attorney from turning the property over to others. There are several stunts in this, perhaps the best of which is the one where Eddie walks a tight rope, carrying Dynamite Dan on his back to safety.

"The Girl of My Dreams" (Exhibitors).

The story of Billie Rhodes' first feature starring vehicle, "The Girl of My Dreams" which is controlled by Robertson-Cole Company, and will be released through the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, was written by Wilbur Nesbit. It is an adaptation of Mr. Nesbit's story of the same name which has been widely read. Its construction is such that it readily adapted itself to motion picture form, and in its leading part it gives Miss Rhodes opportunity to display her charms and ability.

A distinguished cast has been supplied Miss Rhodes which includes Jack McDonald, Lamar Johnston. Golda Mawden, Jane Keckley, Frank MacQuarrie, Benjamin Suslow and Leo Pierson.

"Every Mother's Son" Coming Soon.

Cutting of the film having been completed, "Every Mother's Son," R. A. Walsh's Fox drama of mother love and peace reconstruction, is scheduled for early release. Considerable interest has been aroused by the presence of Charlotte Walker as head of the cast which enacted the play. Miss Walker, as star of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and other big stage successes, is a leading actress of the stage. Another member of the cast is Gareth Huges, one of the best known of the younger American players.

In connection with "Every Mother's Son" exceptionally fine advertising and publicity material has been prepared.

U. B. O. Will Show "Kaiser's Finish."

All theatres controlled by the United Booking Offices will show "The Kaiser's Finish." A contract has been signed between the U. B. O. and the Emanee Film Company, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, which purchased the New York City and state rights on the production from A. Warner, whereby not only the Keith houses will play it, but also the Proctor and Meyer and Schneider circuits, embracing all of the downtown territory. One of the first showings it will have in a house controlled by the U. B. O. will be at the Brevoort, in Brooklyn. This theatre has given it the star position in all of its twenty-four-sheet billings.

"The Love Net" for Peace Party.

World Pictures announces that one of its new productions, "The Love Net," starring Madge Evans with Jack Drumier, was taken on board the George Washington for the purpose of being shown to President Wilson. At the same time it gives publicity to the following letter received from the Community Motion Picture Bureau:

"You will be glad to know that your picture, 'The Love Net,' went to France on the George Washington, and will be seen by President Wilson. You know what we think of the picture, and we are glad to be able to give you this interesting bit of information."

Arrow Film Increases Activity.

The list of sales reported in our last issue under the heading "State Right Sales Reported This Week" indicates that the activities of the Arrow Film Corporation have not abated, but that if anything, there are indications of renewed energy in building up a sales record. In addition, a number of sales have been made by this organization of the reissued serial "The Demon Shadow" as outlined in another article in this issue.

Doctor Shallenberger, president of the company, announces that, owing to the increased business, it has been necessary to increase the office force, and that in future he will give more of his personal attention to the foreign sales end of the business, while continuing to supervise the domestic department.

Brabin to Direct Next Nesbit.

Charles J. Brabin, who directed Virginia Pearson in "Buchanan's Wife"—which has won laudatory criticisms from trade press reviewers—will direct the next William Fox Standard Picture to be made by Evelyn Nesbit. Miss Nesbit is now finishing "Woman! Woman!" under the direction of Kencan Buel.

The Fox corporation is negotiating for the picture rights to a big popular novel published recently, this story being considered exceptionally suited for Miss Nesbit's style of work. Mr. Brabin's direction of "Buchanan's Wife," which was based on the novel of the same name by the late Justus Miles Forman, has been the subject of favorable comment, and bacause of this and his high standing among directors Mr. Brabin is believed to be peculiarly fitted to direct the coming Nesbit picture.

Proving How To-day Collects Bitter Indemnity from a Woman's Past.

Bitter Mistake the Dead Past Could Not Bury.

Advertising Angles: Introduce the new star as far in advance as you can. Use portrait cuts and readers. Take a special lobby display. Then work into the direct advertising. For the playing date paint a broad line in front of your house and letter it "The Danger Zone," with a sign above inviting patrons to enter the danger zone with Madlaine Traverse.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

"TOO FAT TO FIGHT."

Goldwyn Presents Frank McIntyre in an Intensely Human Presentation of Rex Beach's Clever Story With a War Background.

Cast.

Norman Dalrymple ("Dimples"), Frank McIntyre
Helen Brewster.....Florence Dixon
Mrs. Brewster.....Henrietta Floyd
Belle Rainey.....Countess De Martimprey
Major Brewster.....Harold Entwistle
Freddie.....Jack McLean

Scenario by Chas. A. Logue.

The Story: Norman Dalrymple wants to be a soldier, but even the Y. M. C. A. turns him down hard. As he puts it himself: "I'm too fat to fight and too immoral for the Y. M. C. A., but I'd give a leg to be with the boys over there." Part of his desire is pure patriotism and the rest love for Helen Brewster, who has enlisted in the motor corps. He gives his leg, for a friend gets him into the Y. M. C. A., and he is wounded saving Helen's father, who is wounded during a charge. He was "only a Y. M. C. A. soup carrier," but he more than did his bit.

Feature Frank McIntyre as "Dimples" and Florence Dixon as Helen Brewster.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Prove to Your Own Satisfaction That "Nobody Loves a Fat Man."

Photodrama Provides Laughs as Best Possible Obesity Cure.

Fat Man Trains Down to Size and Becomes Sudden Hero on Photoplay.

Under Flag of Mercy He Backed the Soldiers of Freedom.

Advertising Angles: Whoop up the fact that this is a Rex Beach story, but also make capital of Mr. McIntyre, who is better known on the stage than in the films. He does a very human piece of work in this play, so add that everyone will love this fat man in spite of the old saying. Work to the Y. M. C. A. and K. of C. for mass attendance, both organizations being mentioned, though primarily this is a story of the Y. M. C. A. Appeal less directly to the supporters of all war relief organizations. Play up the fact that this is one of the unsung heroes back of the boys on the firing line. Use the press sheet idea of a commission sale to the Y. M. C. A. That will bring an extra attendance and your share will largely be velvet.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book. Music one-sheet.

"THE POOR RICH MAN."

Metro Presents Francis X. Bushman and Beverley Bayne in the Eventful Story of a Pampered Only Son Who Has Nothing But Time and Money to Spend.

Cast.

Vantyle Carter.....Francis X. Bushman
Arizona Brown.....Beverly Bayne
Teddy Carter.....Stuart Holmes
Edith Trentoni.....Sally Crute
"Pecos" Bill Brown.....William Frederic
James Carter.....C. J. Williams
Hobo.....Julius Cowles
Wrestler.....Louis R. Wolheim

Directed by Charles J. Brabin.

The Story: Vantyne Carter's father has so much money that Van fails to see the necessity for work and has to resort to a gymnasium to keep himself in physical trim. His father arranges with his lawyer to have it given out that he has been killed on a hunting trip, and the will when read provides that the money shall go to Van only on condition that for six months he shall be self-supporting. He is left a suburban home and five acres of ground as working capital. Van, who has fallen in love with Arizona Brown, the daughter of a man who has just struck it rich, starts a fashionable hotel on the property, with a jazz band in the hayloft and a scale of prices that is nothing less than scandalous. He is cleaning up when Teddy Carter, his cousin, to whom the property is to pass should Van fail to carry out the terms of the will, plans with an accomplice to ruin the reputation of the hotel with a fake robbery charge. He succeeds, but when he goes to claim the property his "dead" uncle kicks him out, and Van comes through with flying colors.

Feature Francis X. Bushman as Vantyne Carter and Beverly Bayne as Arizona Brown.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Pictured Story of a Ne'r-Do-Well, Who Comes to Life and Wins Out.

An Odd Legacy Makes a Rascal Poor and a Clever Man Rich.

Playing the Game in the Chase for Love and Happiness.

How a "Wooly Westerner" Made New Yorkers Take Close Notice.

Clever Photodrama Based on Odd Motives in Human Nature.

Advertising Angles: Play the stars from all angles. You can get a lot by asking your readers how they would make five acres of suburban property pay best. It might be started as a teaser, or a prize might be offered for the best reply. Try a dodger advertising the Deport Manor with "rooms $10 per day and up—mostly up," and other prices along the same lines, telling would-be guests to apply to your theatre on a certain date. Run the theatre end in very small type on the bottom of the bill.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheets. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel. Slide, Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10 sepia, 11x14 sepia, 22x28 colored. Cuts.

Released December 23.

"SET FREE."

Bluebird Presents Edith Roberts in the Fascinating Story of a Girl Who Wanted to be a Gypsy Until She Changed Her Mind.

Cast.

Roma.....Edith Roberts
John Roberts.....Harry Hilliard
Ronald Blair.....Harold Goodwin
Mrs. Roberts, John's mother, Molly McConnel
Aunt Henrietta.....Blanche Gray

The Story: Roma Wycliffe, last of her line, finds the prosy life at her aunt's unendurable. There is a tradition that her great-great-grandfather was a gypsy and with this slim excuse she gets a fanciful dress and takes to the "open road." She comes under the notice of Mrs. Roberts, a wealthy woman, who takes her under her protection, but Roma finds that she has merely exchanged one staid home for another and explains this to John Roberts when he proposes marriage. John promptly tells her that he leads a double life, and that in reality he is a gypsy king. He takes her to the lair, with his hired gypsies and Roma is getting thoroughly disgusted with gypsy life when the police raid the resort and arrest the gang for a bank robbery. It takes a lot of explaining to clear John, but it is worth it, for Roma decides that respectability is not so bad after all.

Feature Edith Roberts as Roma and Harry Hilliard as John Roberts.

Program and Advertising Phrases: How a Foolish Girl Discovered Through Bitter Experience that She Was Not a Gypsy.

Original Method and Motive Challenges Traditions in Photoplaying.

The "Open Road" That Led Girl Into Belated Happiness.

How a Girl Failed to Find Happiness Having Her Own Way.

Life and Love Portrayed in Faithful Portions by Photodrama.

Advertising Angles: If you have never done it, this would be a good chance to use a gypsy fortune teller in your lobby. Call her Roma and do not connect her with the story at first. Let her tell all who come for free fortunes that their happiness depends upon seeing "Set Free." Even if you do not use the fortune teller, you can get up a gypsy camp fire for the lobby with a card telling your patrons to see what gypsy life really is. For your newspaper work tell that Roma started out to be a gypsy and was arrested for robbing a bank.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slides. Heralds. Players' cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.

Released December 9.

"IRISH EYES."

Triangle Presents Pauline Starke in a Romantic Story of the Irish Fisher Folk and "the Gentry."

Cast.

Pegeen.....Pauline Starke
O'Barry.....Ward Caulfield
Moll.....Virginia Ware
Jerry O'Flynn.....Gus Saville
Sir Arthur Ormsby.....Joe King
Guy Ormsby.....Eugene Burr
Kittie Brice.....Rae Godfrey

Directed by William Dowlan.

The Story: Pegeen is orphaned by the death of her father and to escape her cruel stepmother accepts the shelter of Sir Arthur Ormsby's castle with never a thought of the proprieties. She learns to love him. Guy, Sir Arthur's brother, comes to the castle to get money and to escape Kitty, a chorus girl. Kitty follows him and stops at the village inn. Guy is attracted by Pegeen, but learns that she loves his brother. He learns, too, that Sir Arthur loves the girl. Playing on this love, he tells his brother that Pegeen loves him, and Sir Arthur goes to buy off the chorus girl. Pegeen sees him there and misunderstands. She leaves the castle and appeals to Kitty to teach her how to be a circus girl, but there is good in Kitty and through her tact the road is made straight for the little waif.

Feature Pauline Starke as Pegeen and Joe King as Sir Arthur Ormsby.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Pauline Starke, Petite Star of a Romance of Old Ireland and the Sea.

How an Irish Girl Turned Siren to Win Her Heart's Love.

Sea and Shore Lend Scenes of Thrilling Deeds of Daring.

Choosing Between a Siren's Lure and the Charm of Irish Eyes.

Tender Romance of Land and Sea with an Irish Lass as Heroine.

Advertising Angles: In addition to the star, work on the title with an appeal to your Irish patrons. Make a general appeal with the charm of the story and tell that it is a tale of sentiment that does not need railroad wrecks or battle scenes to make it interesting.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electroc and mats. Triangle magazines. Press sheets.

Released December 15.

"CROWN JEWELS"

Triangle Presents Claire Anderson in the Story of a French Girl and a Young American Who Saved the Treasures of a Minor Potentate.

Cast.

Diana DeLille.....Claire Anderson
Madame Levine.....Lillian Langdon
Kenneth Gray.....Joe Bennett
Baron Strickland.....Frank Leigh
Maxwell Grey.....Geo. Pearce
Varnet.....Billy Musgrave
Lupino.....H. N. Dudgeon

Directed by Roy Clements.

The Story: The monarch of one of the minor European kingdoms, fearful of the unrest in his country, sends his crown jewels to America. Mme. Levine, an adventuress, plots to gain possession of them, using for a tool Diana DeLille, a French refugee. Diana confides her suspicions to Kenneth Gray, a young American, and, though Mme. Levine imprisons Diana, Kenneth manages to frustrate the plans of the thieves, and gains Diana as his reward.

Feature Claire Anderson as Diana DeLille and Joe Bennett as Kenneth Gray.

Program and Advertising Phrases: How a European Monarch Forestalled Lean Days By Shipping His Jewels to America.

Baffling Situations, Big Thrills, Big Ideas and Big Climaxes .

Beautiful Claire Anderson in a Photoplay of Thrills.

Society Crook Plays a Desperate Game.

Photoplay Demonstrating That King's Jobs Are Shaky Nowadays.

Advertising Angles: In addition to playing up the star, give this a news twist by suggesting that probably more than one minor king has his crown jewels safely cached in some American storage vault. Work such lines as, "See how the little kings of Europe play safe—and see how safe it is in, etc." You can probably work your local paper for a news story along these lines, running in a mention of the play. You can get a good throwaway with one big line reading, "The red flag of anarchy," and running on to tell in solid type that the fear of anarchy caused the shipment of the crown jewels. Try to make it look like an anarchist circular rather than a show bill.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle magazines. Press sheets.

Released December 22.

His father demurs until a New York business associate tells him of the Adventure Shop, and assures him that Phyllis and her friends will be only too glad to scare him back to Homeburg. Advertising Angles: Play up the idea of the shop for your chief appeal, dwelling on the lengths to which the society folks go for amusement. Your local paper can possibly help you to dig up some facts about monkey dinners and the like. This should be the surest appeal outside of New York. You might advertise for members for a new club, the particulars of which will be given at your house on the showing date. Word the notice vaguely to arouse curiosity.

John McKonzie, troubled by his domestic affairs, loses his grip on his business, and a bitter strike is imminent. He sends Dolly to her uncle, but the uncle promptly writes back that he will gladly exchange Dolly for the striking workmen, as being less troublesome. Then Dolly and her little colored playfellow get lost in the woods. Word is sent to McKenzie, and the strikers call a halt in the proceedings to hunt for the little child. She is found by her mother, who goes back home with her to stay, and the strike is settled by the appreciative father.

David is befriended by Dr. Roselli, a political exile, and becomes the playmate of Roma, the doctor's daughter. He assumes the name of Rossa. With the passing of years, Roma becomes the ward of Baron Bonelli, and is supposed to have become his mistress. David is a socialist agitator, and is particularly fervent in his denunciation of the baron, who is Prime Minister of Italy. The baron arranges to have David killed, but Roma saves him. Later she is induced to betray him through lying promises of clemency for her husband. David thinks her betrayal intentional. He kills the baron, and Roma assumes the blame for the crime. Jack Hazzard (Happy Jack),
Denman Maley
Ruth Stratton.....Louise Huff
Aunt Tildy.....Mrs. Corbett
Cy .....Horace Newman
Seth .....Thomas Wood
Rickety Ann.....Margaret Seddon

The Story: There are few in the United States who are not familiar with the story of the play; how Reuben Whitcomb breaks jail to flee from the long imprisonment that threatens him for a bank robbery when the real thief is actually behind the bars of the same prison; how he comes to New York, where he is found—and lost again—by the tramp kindly old Josh Whitcomb had befriended, and how, eventually, they all go back to the New Hampshire farm. The coming peace is a problem — everybody's problem.

Now is the time for the American exporters and producers to prove to the exhibitors and renters abroad their willingness and ability to shoulder their full burden of responsibility during the period of reconstruction.

The International Export and Import Section of the Moving Picture World will heartily do its share.

THE popularity of American moving pictures in foreign fields and their domination of the world's markets, have been brought about by a consistent service of high-quality moving pictures.

Abroad, as in America, Paramount and Artcraft Pictures have been the greatest factor in building for moving pictures the patronage of thinking people, the patronage that has established the photoplay as the great amusement of both hemispheres.

The Crystal of Life

THE motion picture is like the magician's crystal. You gaze into it and you see life.

Life alight with gayety and purple with dreams, life astride the champing steed of adventure, life careless of death.

By what test have Paramount and Artcraft motion pictures emerged crowned monarchs in this art?

By the test of the faithfulness and clearness of their crystal-reflections of life!

By the sheer vitality of their foremost stars —by their sheer beauty—by their sheer charm —often by their sheer lovableness — by their LIFE!

And nowhere else is there such directing as in Paramount and Artcraft, such gorgeous presentation, such superb understanding of the story's artistic atmosphere, such closeness to life's richest hues!

In deed as well as in name are these motion pictures—Paramount! Artcraft!

Paramount and Artcraft Motion Pictures

These two trade-marks are the sure way of identifying Paramount and Artcraft Pictures — and the theatres that show them.

EXPORTERS LAUNCH DRIVE FOR MUTUAL PROTECTION

Enthusiastic Meeting, Attended by Men Representing Control of 70% of Film Sold from America, Results in Definite Action Being Taken

TAKE PLEDGE TO SHOW UP ILLICIT TRADE

Anyone "Willingly" and "Knowingly" Buying or Selling Pictures Without Legal Right So To Do To Be Scorched by Widest Possible Publicity—Entire Business May Be Assembled in One Building in New York City.

A gathering of film exporters, all members of the Film Exporters of America, Inc., met on December 12 in the projection room of the Export & Import Film Company for the express purpose of adopting whatever measures were found necessary to meet the new problems brought about by the ending of hostilities and the prospect of an early return to normal conditions.

About twenty men were present, representing the control of over 70 per cent. of the film exported from this country.

To Go After Illicit Traders.

The most important point discussed at the meeting referred to the protection of picture rights in foreign territories and the best means to accomplish this end. The recent lifting of the censorship ban and other Custom House regulations that, although restricting trade and causing great hardships in other directions, had proven a very effective means for preventing illicit film traffic between American ports and foreign countries, has created a problem fraught with many dangers, which, not only the exporters, but the manufacturers and foreign buyers as well, are anxious to solve as rapidly as possible.

The consensus of opinion at the gathering was that a return to the rough-and-tumble conditions prevailing before the war could not be tolerated, and that some effective plan had to be worked out that would safeguard the legitimate interests of the exporting firms owning picture rights throughout the world.

After a heated debate—originating in matters of form and not of principle, as all the members, of course, were in favor of the measure—the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, the Film Exporters of America, Inc., a membership corporation comprising a large percentage of those engaged in the export of motion picture films from the United States to foreign countries, is desirous of furthering the common good of all those interested both in the United States and foreign countries in the export of motion pictures; and

Whereas, during the past year the Government of the United States has exercised a supervision over all pictures exported, thus protecting those owning and purchasing rights to pictures for foreign countries; and

Whereas, this Government supervision has been modified;

Be it Therefore Resolved, that this Association will use all lawful means to prevent unlawful dealings in films which shall be brought to its knowledge; and that when it is determined that any one willingly and knowingly sells or purchases a picture without the legal right to do so, this Association agrees to give such transaction the widest possible publicity, naming all parties proved to have part in the transaction.

FILM EXPORTERS OF AMERICA, INC.

Plan Alliances with Foreign Organizations.

Another matter that came up for discussion was the advisability of establishing a working arrangement, on a reciprocal basis, with similar protective organizations established in other countries, so as to make the scope of the Association as international as possible.

The other point discussed and agreed upon at the meeting is only second in importance to the stand taken by the exporters on the question of illicit trading. It was decided to open suitable offices for the Association, putting in charge a man acquainted with export and import and with the producing and distributing phases of the American market. The members of the Association will find in this office, which will also serve as club-room and meeting place, accurate and up-to-date records of the producing activities of the United States and other countries, specifying the actual producers and the parties controlling the rights in the different parts of the world.

Will Maintain Central Offices.

Needless to say these headquarters of the Exporters of America, Inc., will give invaluable service to all foreign buyers, as they will be able to keep in close touch with the changes of the market and place their orders with the assurance of dealing through the proper channels.

Although these were the only two measures officially adopted at the meting, the plans of the Association, which are fast maturing, are much wider and will doubtless improve the whole export situation on this side, placing it on a thoroughly business-like and systematic basis. We understand that tentative steps have already been taken, with the enthusiastic approval of all the members, to secure a lease on ten or twelve floors of a centrally located building. One of the floors will be devoted to the general headquarters of the Association, club-rooms, restaurant, etc. Another whole floor, divided into separate offices, will be placed at the convenience of foreign buyers, who can rent these suites or rooms during their stay in New York, and more efficiently transact their business. The other floors will be taken by the offices of the various exporting houses, concentrating in this way the whole export business of the United States in one single building.

Inter-Ocean Emissary Carries "No-Junk" Campaign to Orient

Horace G. Harper Will Be Permanently Located in Far East After He Has Completed Initial Trip of 40,000 Miles—Hurries Away to Fight Threatened Evil.

After a series of conferences with President Paul H. Cromelin and the officers of the Inter-Ocean Films Corporation, Horace G. Harper, formerly with the Australasian Films, Ltd., has left the United States for a 40,000-mile trip to the farthest corners of the Far East as an Inter-Ocean emissary. The International Section of the Moving Picture World has it on the best of authority that Mr. Harper's trip was not primarily for sales, but as part of a campaign against the use of "junk" film in foreign markets—particularly the Far Eastern ones that this paper has long and persistently urged.

The Inter-Ocean, it might be said, has for many months been waging a war on the "junk evil" through its agents in foreign lands. But in some of these lands, particularly the Far Eastern countries, there are no such representatives, and the Inter-Ocean executive board gradually determined that the only sure way of carrying the campaign into these countries was by means of a permanent field representative.

In trade paper stories that have appeared about the Harper trip a mistaken impression was given that Inter-Ocean's work in connection with this campaign was looked on as complete with the finish of Mr. Harper's long journey. The truth of the matter, the World learns, is that Mr. Harper is permanently assigned to the Far East for the purpose mentioned at the beginning of this story, and that he is not likely to come back to the States, unless the unexpected happens.

That is to say, Mr. Harper's work will be to conduct a continuous fight on the "junk" film, explaining the value of the brand new product and showing by test the wisdom of exhibiting only new pictures. Previous accounts do not mention that Mr. Harper was a leading exhibitor in Australia, the land of his adoption, before entering the film exchange business, but the Inter-Ocean representative gained in Australia a reputation for live-wire exhibiting stunts and all-around show management that is still remembered by the veteran cinema proprietors out there. For this reason he was considered qualified to conduct what would be as much, or more, a campaign of education than one of sales—he would be able to educate the Far Eastern exhibitors encountered to the advertising angles that can be found in new pictures alone, as well as to the quality difference.

Inter-Ocean Associates and Friends of Horace G. Parker Bidding Him Godspeed on His Long Trip to the Orient.

Originally it was planned that Mr. Harper spend six months, covering all the larger American cities, for a line on their exhibiting methods before leaving on his long trip. But when a clipping from a foreign trade journal saying that many "junk men" in London who had been put out of business by the war were preparing to get busy again, it was determined at the Inter-Ocean office that the earlier Mr. Harper started the better, especially when advices were received from Inter-Ocean correspondents abroad supporting the view taken in the clippings.

When the Inter-Ocean field representative is not featuring the merits of the new American films, he will attempt to find a hearing for such American-made motion picture supplies as the Speer Carbon, the Fulco Accessorics and the Globe Steel Reel. The accessories field was one very largely catered to by German manufacturers before the war, but it is believed that with the high cost of production in the Central Empires the possibility of American accessories, through their improvements, "catching on" is bright.

Mr. Harper goes first to Sydney, Australia, after which he will visit the principal exhibitors and circuits in New Zealand, India, China, Japan, the Philippine Islands and the Dutch East Indies. At a dinner given in his honor at Reisenweber's, Columbus Circle, New York, before leaving, the following members of the Inter-Ocean staff were in attendance: Paul H. Cromelin, George W. Newgass, Eugene H. Kaufman, Robert A. Foster, J. L. Kempner, Louis Brock, Ricardo Castro, Gus Schlesinger, Bert Adler, Al Hartlieb, Martin G. Cohn, Allan Lownes and E. C. Wallace.

LAMY RESIGNS FROM FOX FOREIGN DEPARTMENT

Joseph Lamy, one of the veterans in the export business, has resigned his position as foreign sales manager of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Lamy is making a study of conditions abroad and of the changes brought about by the coming peace. He will probably head an exporting organization in the near future.

DONATI CLOSES IMPORTANT SOUTH AMERICAN CONTRACTS

Jose Donati, a member of the Cinematografica Sudamericana, S. A., and its representative in New York, has recently purchased for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile all the Florence Reed, Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum pictures to be turned out by the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. The deal was closed through David P. Howells, who controls the foreign rights on these productions. Two of them are already on their way to South America. Mr. Donati has also obtained half of the five-reel output of the Vitagraph Company, about twenty-six or thirty features a year, for Chile, Peru and Bolivia. This contract was closed through L. H. Allen, who handles Vitagraph pictures in Latin-America.

UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE BURNS DOWN IN CUBA

The Asturianos Clubhouse, of Havana, was burned down at the beginning of the month, causing damages estimated at over a million dollars. The building occupied a whole block in the very centre of the city, facing Central Park on one side; the upper stories being taken by the club and the lower ones by several cafes, restaurants, billiard academies, shops and the famous Campoamor Theatre, the only house devoted to moving pictures on a continuous performance basis from Mexico down to Brazil. The Campoamor was exploited under a long-term lease by the Universal Company, and, although this part of the building was the least to suffer by the flames, hundreds of reels ready for distribution throughout the island were ruined by the heat.

B. Lichtig, manager of the Campoamor Theatre and of the Universal exchanges in Cuba, Porto Rico and the rest of the West Indies, arrived in town two weeks ago. He has already shipped 180 reels of film, and before three months are over about 1,500 reels will be on their way to Havana to replenish the stock destroyed by the fire.

Mr. Lichtig states that the Campoamor will probably be ready for business again by the end of March, 1919.

FILM SMUGGLING INTO MEXICO STILL GOING ON

L. H. Allen, on behalf of the Vitagraph Company, reports that sometime ago he sold the Cuban rights on "The Fighting Trail" and "The Woman in the Web" to Callejas & Boan, of Havana, and those on "Vengeance and the Woman" and "The Fight for Millions" to Blanco & Martinez, of the same city, both firms having already been furnished with powers of attorney for the proper registration of copyrights.

Mr. Allen now wishes to state that he has been informed by his clients that Alvarez Arrondo & Co., of Mexico City, are endeavoring to introduce into Cuba, through one of the Havana renters, "The Fighting Trail" and "The Woman in the Web" under disguised titles. According to Mr. Allen, these two copies were stolen from the Vitagraph exchange in Dallas, Texas, and smuggled into Mexico by a firm doing business under the name of "La Imperial Cinematografica."

SULTAN OF PERAK APPEARS IN BURTON TRAVELOGUES

H. T. Cowling, cinematographer of the Paramount-Burton Travelogues, has just arrived at Singapore, after an interesting voyage. Leaving New York in February, 1917, he has toured through Canada, South Sea Islands, New Zealand, Tasmania, Australia, Philippine Islands, China, Japan, Formosa, Siam and the Federated Malay States.

In the course of his overland journey from Siam to the Federated Malay States, Mr. Cowling paid a visit to the Sultan of Perak, H. H. Abdul Jalil, who most graciously consented to the filming of his entire court in full regalia, including princes and princesses. The royal body guard, composed of Indian Sikhs on Arabian horses, all decked in scarlet robes, was in attendance, affording a really magnificent sight.

Mr. Cowling also reports that the Sultan's brother, Raja Abdul Rashid, readily consented to arrange several scenes, in which the princesses appeared, as soon as it was pointed out to him how necessary it was for the Malay people to receive proper representation before the American public.

This was quite a concession, as one of the Mohammedan tenets states very plainly that "thou shalt not make unto thyself the likeness of any living image."

ROBERTSON-COLE CO. EXPAND ORGANIZATION

The rise of the Robertson-Cole Company has been among the most rapid that the moving picture field has seen in years. Long experience in handling world-wide commercial enterprises has, perhaps, given this company a peculiarly keen insight into the wants of the various markets. That it is employing this to good advantage is evidenced by the great amount of interest that is being centered in their activities by the picture buyers and producers here and abroad.

With their recent entrance into the world's rights field they make an addition to their already long list of subjects available to foreign markets of sixty pictures a year. These subjects are marketed in the United States and Canada through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, with branches in all important cities, and include offerings from the National Film Company of America, starring Henry B. Walthall and Billie Rhodes, and from Jesse D. Hampton, featuring William Desmond.

Bessie Barriscale has recently been added to this list to furnish the Robertson-Cole Company eight productions during the coming year. Her first picture, "All of a Sudden, Norma," is already finished.

The anticipated influx of "after the war business" seems already to have made itself evident with the Robertson-Cole Company. During the past few weeks they have negotiated sales with buyers from Spain, Portugal, West Indies, Australia, Central America, Argentina, Paraguay, Uruguay, Great Britain, Scandinavia, Brazil, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, Japan, China, India, Burma, Ceylon, Dutch East Indies and Philippine Islands.

With the lifting of the censorship of pictures at Washington and the lowering of marine and war risk rates the broad plans which have been made by the Robertson-Cole Company will be put more completely in operation. In anticipation of this its organization has been completed for a large expansion of business.

POPULARITY OF AMERICAN PICTURES IN MEXICO

According to one of the U. S. consuls in Mexico, American motion picture films, like other American products, would be a much more popular item than they are at present were it not for the lack of foresight of a great many of the companies sending films here to be exhibited. The familiar border scenes, which almost always show Mexicans as the villains, have time after time been sent here to wound the feelings of a very sensitive people. The reaction after the exhibition of a film of this kind is naturally very great, and the popularity of American films suffers as a consequence. Films with inserts written in English, or any language other than Spanish, make a bad impression, as it is impossible for the audience to follow the sense of the plot, and the picture falls flat. It has been noted that lately the greater part of the American films sent to Mazatlan for exhibitions have had the captions written in Spanish or in both English and Spanish.

American films are popular, reports the consul, principally on account of the clearness of the picture projected, their superiority to European films being very marked in this respect. Otherwise, the European films are on a par with American films in the estimation of the Mexican public. It is, of course, useless for American film makers to send for exhibition in Mexico films which are of no special interest to any but Americans. Comic and melodramatic films are the most popular with the public as a whole, and some of the first of the film serials made in the United States have recently been exhibited here with great success.

export problems, information on the wide-world activities of the Inter-Ocean Company, which are bound to be useful to foreign buyers, and all this got up and laid out in a style that reveals the hand of a veteran.

We could launch into a panegyric of its editor and his achievements—in fact, this is one of the claims to distinction of The Inter-Ocean Globe—but are confronted with the anomaly that Bert Adler is one of the very few publicity men who do not believe in publicity for themselves.

BAN ON SPANISH FILMS CREATES BAD FEELING

A great deal of ill feeling has been caused in Spain by the ruling of the French authorities prohibiting the importation of Spanish films into France. It is hard to say what might be back of this decision, which, by reason of its arbitrary nature, will doubtless be revoked as soon as the peace treaty has been signed, unless it was intended to protect the French motion picture industry against another and perhaps—considering the greater facilities for trading—an even more formidable competitor than the Americans. The French studios, as well as all other industrial plants, were in some cases taken over by the military for the manufacture of articles of warfare and in other cases so restricted by regulations as to curtail their output to the minimum; but there was nothing to prevent the older directors, technicians of all kinds, actresses and actors from emigrating to Spain, where capital in plenty could have been found to organize several picture enterprises, particularly with the assurance that Spanish-made film could have had unhampered access to the French and French-controlled markets. Naturally, such development would have reacted against the French industry.

Irish Company Ready to Produce.

Rumor in film circles in Dublin, Ireland, has it that the Film Company of Ireland, Ltd., is being reorganized, backed by American capital, and is about to begin the production of moving pictures on a large scale for the purpose of invading the American market. Mr. Sullivan, who has been heavily interested in the company for some time, recently visited the United States.

Over-Seas Expressions on American and Indicated

REPRESENTATIVE moving picture men in the foreign field are responding to communications from the International Export and Import Section of the Moving Picture World asking them for an expression on the subject of American-made moving pictures abroad. Touching the topic from many different angles, the extracts printed below will be of great interest and value.

SOME AIR CASTLES OF INDIA EXTRAVAGANT, SAYS LEVETUS

Levetus & Co., buying agents for the Elphinstone Bioscope Company, who have extensive interests throughout India, Burmah and Ceylon, takes advantage of the opportunity afforded to write entertainingly and instructively concerning the markets in which the Elphinstone company operates from its main office in Calcutta, Bombay. The Elphinstone company is the principal owner and controller of picture theatres and exchanges in the territories already mentioned, and Levetus & Co. secure the product the Elphinstone company needs by buying in all parts of the world, including the American as well as the European markets. Extracts from the Levetus letter follow:

"In the course of our dealings with America we have come across evidence of a good deal of ignorance of the actual conditions of the moving picture trade in these countries, and an enormous exaggeration of the scope and capacity of the market, and of the class of films likely to interest the population.

"American producers seem to think that the consumption capacity of a market and prices obtainable therefrom for their products are in direct ratio to the number of the population, and that the percentage of picture theatres to meet the population is equally high all over the world. India, therefore, would seem to them to be a veritable mine of wealth for all concerned, and themselves in particular, and it is necessary that they should be disabused of this because otherwise the extravagant claims which they make are likely to lead to much disappointment, and actual heavy loss.

"In the first place, although India is a very large country and has many millions of inhabitants, the majority of these inhabitants live in places remote from cities, and where no picture theatres ever will, or could, be established. There are only a few big cities which can accommodate permanent picture theatres in the whole territory, and in these cities the vast majority of the inhabitants are too poor to afford even the minimum sum charged for admission to any entertainment of the kind. In point of fact, according to our last advices, in the whole of India, Burmah, and Ceylon, there were not more than six dozen permanent picture theatres altogether. Some of these have a struggle for life, although others do very well, indeed. The number of these theatres is being added to at the rate of perhaps half a dozen per annum, but additions even at this small rate are not likely to continue regularly.

"In addition to these permanent theatres, many of which, however, do not run in the hot weather, there are, of course, a number of traveling 'fit-ups' and shows given from time to time in regimental theatres, etc., as also private entertainments given by the Rajahs, rich men, etc., for the delectation of their guests or people. These shows, however, from the point of view of the purchase of films from American producers, are practically negligible, as it is not once in a thousand times that a film is shown that has not already done the round of the regular theatres, and these exhibitions therefore form no additional market for new films.

"This market, limited as it is, is subject to the invasion of the whole film production of the world—American, as usual, being predominant, Italian, French, British, etc. The consequence is that a good deal of overbuying has been, and is occasionally, done by various renters and theatre owners chiefly from reasons of prestige and competition with each other. It is obvious that this kind of artificial competition and forcing up of prices is one which cannot last indefinitely, and the results have already been noted from the fact that certain of the weaker vessels, having badly overbought, are failing to take up the films on arrival, with the consequence that the latter have to be thrown on the market at a loss, and add to the increasing congestion of stocks.

"Certain firms, American and Italian, have had the idea that by opening their own offices in India, and dumping stocks of films therein, they could control the market and increase the sale of their own particular productions, but in the end it has been found by some, and in our opinion, will be found inevitably by any others who pursue the same tactics, that the expenses of the local organization, and loss on unsaleable films will more than swallow up the profit on the sales made, and it is not likely that this line of business will be pursued permanently.

"Great care and knowledge of the class of films required for India is needed because films that suit theatres catering to European and educated natives are not such as appeal to those who cater only to the natives, and subjects which appeal to natives of Northern India do not necessarily appeal to those in the South, who are of a different race or origin.

"Another important point is that many films suitable for European audiences, and approved by the authorities for exhibition in England, would not be similarly approved by the Indian police for exhibition to the mixed audiences there. Subjects which incite to race antagonism in any way whatever, labor troubles, sex difficulties or reference to religious subjects are rigidly banned. It is therefore necessary to bear these points in mind when making contracts for the Indian market, as buyers there have suffered considerable loss in respect to such films after they have paid for them.

"What the native population like are good films of romantic adventure, well produced, as the public, even of the poorest class, is very discriminating in the matter of the quality of the photography of the films which it will see, and it will not put up with 'cheap' productions of any kind. It is further a public of much more fastidiousness of taste than the American producer seems to think. For instance, the ordinary knockabout comedy film is not a huge success, and is looked upon rather as a 'filler-up' than as a main attraction—very few people in India are drawn to a theatre just to see the 'latest Chaplin film,' etc.

"It must be remembered that the audiences are drawn only from a certain section of the population, and this section which goes to the theatres regularly wants something fresh, not repetition of the same ideas.

"From all this it should be readily appreciated by producers that if they want a regular market in India their idea should not be to scoop a big sum for one or two productions, thus blocking the market for the sale of further films, but they should be content with a moderate price for their films, so that a large proportion of their total output can be absorbed, this being more profitable in the end to both their clients and themselves. To force a high price for a much boomed film once, in a way, is merely in the end to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. The moving picture industry in India may be in its infancy, and development may in the course of time be very great, but it will be a very slow matter indeed, and attempts to force the pace will only lead to disaster.

"We think it due to all our readers to let them know these facts, so that they may not build extravagant air castles on the prospects of business in this particular part of the British empire. * * * Our client, we believe, was the first to give a public picture show in India, and handles, we believe, at least fifty per cent. of all the film business in that market—although we have no exact statistics."

STILL SMALL VOICE FROM ST. CROIX, D. W. I.

Writing for the Danish West Indies Electric Company, operating the only picture theatre in Christiansted, St. Croix, Einar Svendsen, managing director, contributes the information that his supply of film is at present coming from San Juan, Porto Rico, at an average rental of $2 a reel. He complains that the film he is getting is old and far from being satisfactory, and would be pleased to enter into some kind of an arrangement whereby he could be supplied directly from New York. Such an arrangement, he says, would require the absence of the film from New York for about a month if it were shipped by mail. On account of the small population of the city, Mr. Svendsen has found it impossible to show each film more than once. His needs are for sensational serials and one-reel comedies.

BROCKLISS SAYS WAR MADE THINGS "DAMNABLE"

J. Frank Brockliss, who is almost as well known among American film men as he is in the European markets, writes from London where his principal offices are at 167-169 Wardour street. An enthusiastic British subject, Mr. Brockliss has been a First Lieutenant in the British Army for some time, devoting, as he says, about twelve hours a day toward licking the Hun, but still finding another hour or so daily to supervise his extensive moving picture interests. Mr. Brockless writes:

'With regard to your request for particulars concerning the conditions at the present moment, I can only say that the last four and a half years' war conditions can only be summarized in one word, as regards the present commercial condition of this country with regard to the film business—and that one word is "Damnable."

Made Moving Pictures Plans for Their Future Distribution

"It is impossible to give you any description of conditions brought about hy the Great European War, and such troubles as depletion of staff and impossihility of activities through everybody's heing in the army, through the curtailment of the 'worth-while' of commercial activity through the Excess Profit Duty, whereby tbe Government claims 80 per cent. of whatever profit is made and, in addition, 10 cents a foot on negative, which render the business today bardly worth while.

"Of course, conditions will clear after the war and as soon as the boche Is forced into the position be deserves to occupy, namely, that of a servile nation—which undoubtedly he will become—then we shall again be able to get down to real husiness."

GREAT NEED FOR CHANGE IN DISTRIBUTING PLAN

B. Nichols, long identified with the M. P. Sales Agency, Ltd., of London, has been dealing with American moving picture producers and with American-made moving pictures so long and with such success tbat a genuine sympathy with any movement intended to further the interests of American pictures is only to be expected. Extracts from Mr. Nichols' letter are as follows:

"The British market has been and is an important outlet for the American producing companies. As you know, in tbe past this has been tbe film distributing centre of tbe world. Due to tbe war and other conditions which it is needless for me to mention, a large part of this work has lately been carried on by American manufacturers, and I believe the time has arrived when tbe American manufacturer must decide whether he is to look after the world distribution in his own country or whether it will suit his purpose better to leave it in the hands of a distributor in this country.

"Being a distrihutor of American-made moving pictures, I am expressing no opinion on this point, but from my own personal experience I can assure you that the present method is working against the interests of the producing company, as it tends to educate the foreign buyer to play the agent off against the manufacturer or vice versa. Hardly a week passes but I have practical proof of this. This, as you can understand, leads to fraction between the producer and the agent. Of course, neither party is to blame under existing conditions.

"Frankly, I do not think it will be possible to settle down to a proper standard of future business until the European conflagration is a thing of the past.

"On the other hand, I strongly recommend the American producing companies to formulate some fixed policy for the future.

"I would point out that from present Indications the establishing in this country of American film exchanges is not proving at all satisfactory, and I certainly believe that the financial results for the American companies will bear out my remarks on this subject."

NEED OF GOOD START IS STRONGLY EMPHASIZED

Jeffrey, Bernerd, managing director of the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., London, has some interesting things to say about his organization and its manner of doing business. Although comparatively new in the moving picture hranch of the amusement business, the Stoll company is one of the largest renting concerns in Great Britain. To the Goldwyn pictures, which they hold for their territory, they give much credit for the rapid development they have enjoyed. The chairman of the company is one of the best known of English showmen, directing the operation of thirty-six variety and moving picture theatres in the country, among them tbe London Opera House, which is claimed to be the finest moving picture theatre in Great Britain.

Mr. Bernerd says: "We find that American pictures bave to be treated in accordance with the British taste, and hy this treatment we have proved that the pictures which we offer are accepted by the majority of the exhibitors in this country, and I think the manufacturers in America will appreciate tbat an important production having tbe send-off which we can give it adds to its value to an enormous extent, and, by thus adding to its value, that manufacturer naturally increases his value to the British public, whereas a picture which Is shown in an insignificant way Is forgotten about at once."

The Stoll company holds all of its trade shows at the London Alhambra, one of the finest equipped theatres in London.

MUST CEASE PRODUCING TO SUCH "FRIGHTFUL EXTENT"

The Geekay Company, of Dublin, Ireland, of which Godfrey Kilroy is the proprietor, operates in Ireland as an independent exchange, for the most part handling film in Ireland which has heen bought by bigger exchanges for the United Kingdom. Mr. Kilroy says that rarely does it pay to huy a suhject for Ireland alone unless the subject be some "huge sensational subject of the kind turned out by the Italian studios." Mr. Kilroy continues: "Tbe conditions which exist in our territory are in no ways different from the general conditions prevailing in most territories. That is to say, exhibitors want good films and they want them cheap. Owing to the overproduction in the United States the market is flooded with films, some indifferent, but the majority of them good. The natural result of this is the automatic decrease of the hiring fee paid hy the exhihitor, who is enabled to pick and choose as be desires. These conditions will be no better until the United States ceases producing pictures to such a frightful extent. * * * As a matter of fact we are more interested in the distrihution of pictures produced in England by English studios. Better prices are obtained for these in the general way than for tbose obtained for American productions."

LINES CONSTANTLY WAIT BEFORE GLASGOW HOUSES

A. E. Watson, resident manager of the Picture Salon, Ltd., in Glasgow, Scotland, provides some interesting information concerning the city in which he operates. He says: "Tbe population of Glasgow is about 1,000,000. Its picture needs are supplied by 107 theatres, of which the Picture Salon, Ltd., is among the best. The downtown houses show only high-class pictures; the outside houses all classes. We show mainly all 'Selects,' most 'Mutuals,' and high-class 'Worlds,' and other pictures, including 'Metros.' Our patrons are very particular, requiring good photography, good acting, and a good story. War films are entirely off at present. The picture business in Glasgow at the present time is abnormal and it is not at all uncommon to see waiting lines before the theatres for both afternoon and evening shows. Continuous shows open at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and run until 10.30 at nigbt. This bouse is continuous. The seating capacities of the leading theatres in Glasgow are 2,000, 1,300 and 1,200. Prices of admission are from 9d. to 1s. 6d. (American money, 18 to 36 cents), including war tax."

CHARLES PATHE BELIEVES IN COMPELLING SCENARIOS

Writing from Vincennes, France, Charles Pathé makes some interesting remarks on the future of the moving picture business from tbe producer's standpoint. He says: "I received your circular, as well as the article attached, announcing the puhlication of the International Export and Import Section. In tbis article I read:

"Charles Pathé said 'Moving pictures are 10 per cent. art and 90 per cent. capital.' This Is the reason France, Italy, Spain, Great Britain, and other countries, despite tbeir deeper artistic traditions, cannot offer any serious competition to us in tbe realm of cinematography.

"I cannot recall on what occasion I could have made such a remark, but as I have been many times interviewed lately, it is certain tbat a journalist must have interpreted my views on the subject.

"In many different ways I have always said the value of a film is always in close connection with that of tbe scenario.

"A story well studied, well constructed and brougbt out at a cost of only $20,000 or $30,000 will always be more appreciated by the exhibitor and spectator tban an inferior scenario, the production of which might have cost $100,000 or $200,000.

"This is the principle, both elementary and primordial, which should guide all the specialists of our profession.

"If stars, directors, and managers specially, are not convinced that tbe production of a negative should not be undertaken unless the story Is strong (as you say), we must arrive at the conclusion that they are unsuited to be members of this industry.

"Tbis applies to the young as well as to those who have acquired a more or less deserved reputation.

"The young can place all hope in the future, as they alone can keep in mind the real truth that reputation and profits in the cinema business are not obtained with a quantity of negatives executed, signed or distributed, but only with quality.

"This said, you are quite right when you state tbat French, Italian, Spanish, and English producers, as well as those of other countries, will always be handicapped by our American competitors for the conquest of tbe cinematographic world.

"This is caused by the enormous capital which has been invested in the American industry, which has allowed the construction of modern, perfectly equipped studios, perfectly justified by the size of your market.

"Everyone knows that American producers, very often, if not always, can consider the product which they derive from the exploitation of their negatives abroad, as integral profit and supplementary, while their competitors of other countries, who rarely can refund themselves of tbe money invested in their productions on their own respective markets, are compelled (even with equally good scenarios) to exercise greater prudence in the expenses of production than their American competitors."

Moving Pictures Are International

THE product of the French, British, Italian and American studios will soon be shown throughout the world in friendly artistic competition.

The International Export and Import Section of the Moving Picture World aims to promote the sale of American pictures abroad and to encourage the introduction of good European pictures in the United States.

The Great World's War's Over—
What Now of American Pictures?

THE collapse of the world's war officially brought about by the signing of the armistice has produced a feverish activity in export circles and a tendency among the exporters to devise ways and means that will rapidly solve the many problems affecting trade between New York and foreign countries. This is evidenced by the letters we have recently received from well-known New York exporters, which all invoke the co-operation of the authorities in the work of restoring the film export business to normal conditions.

FAVORS PERMANENT AMERICAN REPRESENTATIVES

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, believes that the exportation of films should be closely regulated and makes some pertinent suggestions. He says:

"I vouchsafe the statement that never before in the history of any industry or enterprise that had anything to do with foreign markets were the opportunities for permanent expansion so great as now exist in connection with the motion picture industry.

"The 'World War' lately terminated has opened the door to what has heretofore seemed to be an impossible territory. To maintain the foothold permanently planted, will require no small amount of energy and endeavor.

"It has been established beyond the peradventure of a doubt that films are a vital and potent force in introducing and popularizing practically every line of merchandise, and it is for that reason among others that we will meet with a competition in foreign markets both severe and energetic.

"If I were asked to tritely state what action is necessary on the part of American exporters to maintain and extend their contract with foreign fields, I should answer as follows:

"The regulation of export sales by the transaction of business with local concerns in foreign countries through established American representatives.

"The total elimination of the sale or leasing of used or worn copies of prints.

"A more complete and thorough compilation of data and records in the United States Bureau of Commerce and Labor in connection with the exploitation and exhibition of American produced motion pictures in the various foreign countries.

"I also believe that if the 'Moving Picture World' were properly circulated without translation among the motion picture industry in foreign countries, it would lend material assistance in creating a further demand for American-made products."

AMERICAN FILMS ENTRENCHED ABROAD

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export & Import Film Company, has not forgotten yet the hardships and difficulties the exporters have had to contend with during the past year. His confidence in the future, however, is revealed in the following statement:

"The temptation to complain because of difficulties which have beset American exporters during the past couple of years on account of war time conditions, rather than to look at the brighter side of the picture which logically presents itself, is strong. And yet, by a very simple process of reasoning, I find it possible to be optimistic after a couple of years of trouble which I am certain will never be experienced in our business again; certainly any nuts we exporters will be called upon to crack in the future cannot be as hard as some we have struggled with during the days of all kinds of governmental control from a dozen different quarters in the past. The hapiest thought is this: American motion pictures have been firmly entrenched in the foreign field—and I say 'firmly entrenched' for the reason that not only have American pictures been booked because no other pictures were available, but for the reason that patrons in foreign countries have developed a real enthusiasm for their style and general excellence. This makes me confident that no matter what opposition may develop after the war, and no matter what difficulties may present themselves here in the States, American moving pictures will at least hold the position in the foreign market which they have secured—and this means that the American motion picture export business is always going to be about one thousand per cent. better than it was in the days when I tackled it first.

"Don't think from this statement, however, that I believe that we are only going to hold our own. On the contrary, I am looking for great progress. The World War has unquestionably been the most powerful awakening influence of history. It has advertised the United States and every industry connected with the United States in a manner which could have been equaled in no other way. It has created a tremendous demand for everything American. The foreign markets have learned to know us—and now that the war is over will want to know us better. And if the demand is there, we'll find a way to meet it, and meeting it, our business will grow.

"The Government's attitude toward the picture export business will, of course, have a great deal to do with future progress. The narrow interpretation which has been made of the regulation placing a per foot tax is at least threatening, and if this regulation is enforced it certainly will be logical for foreign buyers to look to the London market for their supply of pictures, in view of the fact that in that market they will be able to buy the identical films we sell for a half a cent less per foot than we can possibly sell them. The license plan which is still in force is another bad feature, as is also the over-strict regulation of travel from this country to the foreign markets; if foreign buyers can visit with us at will while we are unable to go abroad to look after our interests at a time when our opportunities are greatest, certainly we will be placed at a great disadvantage.

"But my optimism helps me again. I am satisfied that the part that American-made motion pictures played in moulding sentiment abroad during the war cannot be readily forgotten, and that the Government will be more willing than it has ever been to help the export business.

"You will realize, of course, that with conditions changing as rapidly as they are—almost over night, indeed—definite prophecies for the future are impossible. Let me just say that I picture a rosy future."

WORLD-WIDE ORGANIZATION NECESSARY

David P. Howells, president of the company which bears his name, offers some constructive suggestions. His letter follows:

"If there is to be such a thing as League of Nations world business never can be carried on as before the war. Then each nation was fighting for commercial supremacy with cut-throat, fight-to-the-finish methods and now we shall have to work for some sort of co-operative scheme by which each nation will supply to the world the things which it is best suited to produce.

"Just as America is called upon to feed the world because of our abundance of all sorts of food stuffs, so it will naturally fall to our lot to supply the bulk of the moving pictures, as this is one of our national specialties—one of the things which nature has best fitted us to do by giving us geographical settings typical of every place and clime, diversified types which represent every race and nation of the earth and climates and atmospheric conditions which make possible a film photography which can rarely be attained in any other part of the world.

"We gladly accept the responsibility of supplying the world with moving pictures as we believe we can do it with entire satisfaction to everyone. We are laying our plans to increase our efficiency in every respect, not only to produce better pictures but to distribute the mmore economically than we have ever done before. Naturally the responsibility of caring for the world business falls on the shoulders of the film exporters, so we have organized ourselves into the 'Film Exporters of America, Inc.,' and can now cope with the problems offered. We are preparing to fulfill our obligations to foreign clients and American manufacturers alike. We shall

Looking Into The Moving Picture Future

WHAT will be the effect of peace on the world's moving picture trade? This is the problem confronting the producers, exporters and importers; the riddle that all the great film centers—New York, Paris, London, Rome, Berlin, Barcelona, Buenos Aires—are trying to solve at this very moment. Will the French and Italians recover the ground lost in the past years? Will Great Britain become an international producing factor? Will Germany be able to retain the gains secured in war times? Will Spain compete in the markets of Latin America despite her failure to do so during the war, when everything was in her favor?

A rapid survey of the present situation might give, perhaps, the key to the future.

France Shows Signs of Alarm.

Only a few weeks before the signing of the armistice a debate was going on in the "Chambre Syndical of the Cinematographie Francaise," the French counterpart of our N. A. M. P. I., to decide whether it was expedient or necessary to stop all production in France until the advent of better times. The reports of the meetings while the convention was in session, attended by representatives of every branch of the French industry, were recently published in the Paris trade papers. They reveal a spirit of intense patriotism and an epic determination to "carry on," but it can be gleaned through it all that the desperate state of the business could no longer be hidden or glossed over. The fact is that when the French moving picture men were in session discussing ways and means to save their industry, the lack of raw stock was threatening a complete paralyzation of all producing activities. How long it will take France to recover, now that conditions have changed, we are not prepared to say.

However, the shortage of national films felt for two years before the crisis of October last had made it imperative for the renters and exhibitors to offer the only pictures available, with the result that has become proverbial. The theatres in France are showing more American than French pictures, and the public gives alarming signs of a decided preference for the foreign product.

As a last resort, the French film men have decided that the salvation of the industry can only be attained by raising the tariff and by compelling the exhibitors to show French-made pictures on percentage, both measures, in our opinion, of very doubtful results.

Italy, leaving aside the sad months following the Caporetto disaster, has continued to produce on a large scale, although constantly losing ground through the invasion of American pictures in those markets which she had come to regard as her natural ones. During the past two years Italian pictures have ceased to be an important commercial factor in Latin America, and, despite the indifference of the American manufacturers in general, does not seem to be able to hold her own in Spain and Portugal. She is even threatened in her home market.

Germany Advances During War.

Germany has advanced by leaps and bounds in the cinematographic field, thanks to the investment of large capital and to a natural market nearly as productive as that of the United States. Up to the signing of the armistice she had been supplying, beside the sixty odd millions in the erstwhile German Empire, the fifty millions in Austria-Hungary, most of the Balkan States, and a large proportion of the film shown in the European neutral countries with the exception of Spain.

This should not be interpreted as meaning that in the above mentioned neutral markets, to which both belligerent groups had a more or less restricted access, German pictures were in the ascendancy through superior quality. To make ourselves clear on this head, the case of Switzerland might serve as an illustrative and typical example. The moving picture and theatrical business entails a certain amount of risk which is absent from other, more conservative, lines of endeavor, such as the sale of groceries, hotelkeeping, etc. The Swiss are notions for their aversion to taking chances, and the amusement business throughout the republic, owing to this national trait, has fallen into the hands of Germans or the sons of Germans, with whom the Allied representatives would not deal under any circumstances.

Lack of space prevents us from citing even more peculiar cases in other neutral countries.

Great Britain, never a great producing nation in this field, has not been very active during the war, although in the past six months a tendency has been noticed to restrict the pressure from America (about 90 per cent. of the film shown in the United Kingdom comes from this side of the Atlantic) and in all the English-speaking countries, including North America, quite a few successful photoplays of British origin have made their appearance in recent months.

Let us examine now the position held by the United States.

An Unprecedented Expansion

The popularity attained by American pictures in some markets has practically eliminated all competition. Such is the case in Latin America, from Mexico to Argentina, the Orient—Australia, New Zealand, India, Burma, Japan, China, Dutch Possessions, etc.—Great Britain and France and her colonies. They have won a prominent position in Spain, Portugal, and all the neutral nations of Europe. Discarding Italy, where an organized campaign has been on foot against the introduction of our films, from New York is shipped today most of the film exhibited throughout the world with the exception of the Central Powers and the States under their influence.

But with the signing of the armistice some radical changes have been brought about.

The menace of Germany as a producing market will not be felt for a long time—as two or three years can be considered "a long time" in any business based on amusing the public. Unless we are being fed by the daily press on sensational news stories without foundation in fact, and always providing that we can read the signs of the times, a decline of similar importance will be registered in all those countries bordering on the German Confederation. The red wave engulfing Europe from the Volga to the Rhine, which threatens to stage in Central Europe a repetition of the Russian tragedy, does not lend itself to campaigns of commercial expansion.

With Germany out of the running, Italy, France, Great Britain, Spain and the United States will be the only nations in a position to compete in the international markets. And right here it should be made quite plain that we are not guided by any wartime prejudice when leaving Germany out of the reckoning; "soviets" and industrial aggression do not go together.

In regard to Spain, nothing but a miracle will enable her to accomplish under normal conditions what she could not do during the war.

England Promises Competition.

England will doubtless offer some brisk competition in the home market, and, to a more limited extent, throughout the British Empire. Her better pictures are also bound to find their way to the United States. France and Italy will soon be competing—although on a restricted scale—in the available international markets. And New York will keep on supplying in predominating quantities all the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking nations, the Orient, all North America and the greater part of Europe.

The happenings of a year hence are still on the knees of the Gods, and it would be foolish to prophesy.

There is one point, however, that all exporters and importers should do well to fix in their minds. The United States constitutes today the most stable country in the world, and this should not be forgotten when venturing into the future.

It is our firm belief that within two years—as soon as the United States has established its banks and commercial agencies abroad and completed its vast mercantile marine—New York will be in an even more advantageous position than at present to take care of the film needs of the world.

WORLD-WIDE EDUCATIONAL DRIVE

From India and Siberia, Extremes of the Asiatic Continent, Come Encouraging Inquiries to the Moving Picture World Concerning Immediate Future—Many Projection Machines and Films Required

TRIBUTE TO THE POWER OF THE SCREEN

Serious-Minded Men of Affairs Hope to Bridge Gap of Lost Time and Opportunities in Aid of Backward Countries.

By W. H. Jackson

By a strange coincidence during the course of a few days recently, important mail came to us from the extreme points of India and Siberia. It is hardly possible to conceive two more opposite points both in nature, habits, geographical or human conditions. Although thus diametrically opposed, they are unified in thought and purpose in things pertaining to human progress, and each alike appeal to the common unifier and universal leader and exposer of the highest thoughts and purpose, the moving picture.

The Moving Picture World is gratified at receiving from these distant parts the information that this publication is the medium through which there has come to them the knowledge of the possibilities within their reach, and it has been a pleasure to assure them that their trust in this paper will be fully ratified.

In India the moving picture has already made much headway and the immediate desire is to so plan that great and immediate gain may be realized. In a widely circulated printed circular we find the leaders in educational moving pictures in that great country sadly deplore the detracting influences of many pictures, the tone of which does not reach their own standard. It is well to remember that India possesses a certain standard of philosophy which is easily outraged, and only the best kind of pictures intended for entertaining purposes are acceptable there. For the educational pictures they have nothing but high praise, hence the present written demand for more of them, a demand made stronger because of that serious-mindedness which is the common characteristic of that great people whose diversified races and differences are rapidly becoming unified under the British guidance, a guidance which has been intensified by the World War and India's part in it. Coincident with these conditions we learn that the moving pictures have proved of most timely aid, and the call for more of them is a general one.

The classes of educational pictures desired are of two kinds: First, those of a general character, dealing with social conditions as applied to all classes of people; and second, those adaptable to their own educational or scholastic conditions.

In the first of these classes, hygienic, sociological, scientific and industrial are the subjects desired; while in the second class, scenic and travel, art and arhitecture, zoology and topical, especially those topicals of world-wide interest.

From Siberia the demand is of a very different nature. The knowledge they have of moving pictures is not very extensive, apart from those leaders in the work, who seem to be as alive in experience and interest as elsewhere. For this cause they are anxious for such a campaign of moving picture educationalism as shall lift the inhabitants of the great stretch of Siberia to a higher level. It is therefore a great tribute to the moving picture that it can bridge a gap of lost time and opportunities, and lift a neglected or backward country to the level and average of other more favored lands. To realize these ambitions, a large and seemingly well financed "Educational Union" has been formed, including men of education, who value the moving picture and write us of their aims and requirements.

These requirements consist of several hundred projection machines, those with self light-producing power being most needed, as great stretches of country have as yet no electric power.

Several thousands of films will also be required, as it is the purpose of those in charge of this great work to commence a great sort of "drive" in this educationally backward land. It will not only be the pleasurable duty of the Moving Picture World and its Educational Department to give all the aid possible to secure the success of this work, but it affords an opportunity to many others in the various trades affected who will read this, to be advised of these openings and to encourage and help as far as lies in their power. It cannot be too thoroughly realized that the after-war openings for the work of the moving pictures in general and of the educational pictures in particular will be very great, and if those advance inquiries from India and Siberia are any indication, the future is great indeed.

CENSORSHIP AGITATION IN AUSTRALIA

Women's Leagues Join Hands to Insist Upon More Rigid Supervision of Pictures in Antipodes—Victorian Chief Secretary Has Bill to Introduce.

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, Oct. 28.—The effect of some picture productions upon the minds and morals of children, and the necessity for a more rigid censorship, were matters trenchantly dealt with by a deputation of women which waited upon the Director of Education in the absence of the Minister.

Among the bodies represented were the Women's Reform League, New Education Fraternity, Professional Women's Association, Girl's National League, Mother's Union, Women's Christian Temperance Union, Feminist Club, and the Kindergarten Training College.

A member of the deputation pointed out that the Women's Reform League had recently carried a resolution urging that a stricter film censorship should be instituted, and that women who had made a special study of child minds would be invited to sit on the Censorship Board.

The Director agreed with the deputation that some films were screened that were not in the best interests of the children. It did seem that there should be some more careful selection of subject matter to be put upon the screens. As to how a better selection should be made was a matter on which he did not wish to speak. He promised to lay the representation before Mr. James, the Minister for Education.

Mr. Fuller, Chief Secretary, and head of the New South Wales censors, on hearing of the above deputation, made passing reference to the statements made. "When I assumed office, I almost immediately appointed a censorship board. Many undesirable pictures were prohibited. Then the federal censorship was established, in order largely to remove restrictions from the trade. The state censorship was then suspended to avoid confusion. In time it was made evident that questionable pictures were being shown, and the state machinery was again brought into action. When the vigilance officers of my department discover a doubtful picture my board views the film. Thus a number of pictures have been banned as far as New South Wales is concerned. I do not claim that everything now displayed on the screens is unexceptionable, but I do contend that most material improvement has been secured, an improvement which will become accentuated under the vigilance of my department."—Imrie.

Indian Agents Enter Business.

Khattau & Co., merchants and commission agents of Bombay, India, have recently opened a separate department devoted to the moving picture business. We are informed that this firm is quite influential in the Indian markets. We shall be glad to furnish their address to any exporter desirous of getting in touch with them.

HOLLANDERS LODGE PROTEST AGAINST FILM RESTRICTIONS

No human instrument is perfect, and the "trading with the enemy act," which is as far removed from perfection as anything we have ever come across, could not, of course, please everybody.

Its application to the film business between this country and Holland has given rise to many misunderstandings and protests. One of the Dutch trade papers commenting upon it makes some interesting statements, which we will partially reproduce:

"It is a well-known fact," says our Dutch contemporary, "that at present we are no great admirers of German films, but, whatever our opinion may be, we claim that the film trade, and more particularly the daily film programs, ought to be always international, and we consider it unfair that our oversea friends should try to dictate to us what we may and what we may not show in Holland.

"At other times we have resisted the pressure of the Central Powers to influence our film shows, and at present we wish to take the same position toward the Allies. As long as in Holland we are still in a position to protect our own interests, and, as long as the Entente does not prove that film importers of reputation have violated the agreement with the N. O. T., we will not tolerate any unnecessary meddling with our affairs."

However, all these was written before the signing of the armistice, and, as far as the "trading with the enemy act" and similar laws passed by the Allied governments go, they served their purpose more or less efficiently while the war lasted, and will no doubt be soon repealed.

maintain men in every country of the world to keep in the very closest touch with film men there in order to supply the markets with such things as are wanted. We shall ask for suggestions from all these countries and shall amalgamate their ideas with our own, thereby making the motion picture more effectively universal than it has ever been before. We shall devote much time to the study of shipping in order to devise ways of facilitating the transportation of films so that the exhibition of pictures in Calcutta, Buenos Aires, Petrograd and other far-off points will be a matter of weeks after their release in New York instead of months as hitherto. We are now able to enjoy American banking facilities in practically every part of the world, making easy and convenient the transfer of credits and moneys. We shall do all in our power to increase these accommodations.

"We exporters are standing solidly together—ready to 'do our bit' in supplying the world with the best pictures, in the best way for the best good of all concerned."

AMERICAN FILM EXPORT NEVER WAS "WAR BABY"

Paul H. Cromelin, the dean of American film exporters, as he has been called on several occasions, insists that the growth of the film export business is based on merit. It is not a "war baby," he affirms. Here is his statement:

"Will American motion pictures retain their present strength in the foreign markets after the conclusion of peace? This will be purely a matter of the strength of the American motion picture. The simple disappearance of shiping and censorship conditions are not likely to help much if our films do not hold up in quality.

"While there is no doubt that the war has given American films an extra chance in some of the foreign countries—principally because of the death of "junk," which it no longer remained profitable to ship—I, for one, do not think that the American film took its present place totally as the result of 'war luck.'

"The export side of the American film business has never appeared to me as a 'war baby.'

"It is true that the sale of American films abroad has had its greatest impetus since 1914, but it is also true that the quality of American films has steadily advanced in that period. Certainly, no well-balanced human would speak of the one reel of eight or ten years ago in the same terms of quality as the typical feature of this day.

"Of course, American pictures are going to retain their lead in the world market. There is a quality 'If' and no other. Our future abroad is in the hands of our directors, our players and our writers here."

Poor Merchandising Ability Has Hurt Italy's Export Chances

Ferdinando V. Luporini, who discusses film conditions in Italy in the relation of the present and past to the possible future in this article, is a well known buyer in the big markets of the world. He is Italian by nationality and was engaged in the film industry in his native country before his globe-trotting in behalf of various big interests began. For some time he has been in New York as the buying representative of Alberto Sestini, one of the biggest operators in Brazil.

The motion picture industry in Italy is passing through a period of crises of which are clear indexes the cries of alarm that, in the sunny peninsula, are arising from everywhere against what is being defined "The American Peril." In fact, America has not only, and more than successfully, invaded all foreign markets where once she was a leader both for quality and quantity, but she has also set foot in Italy with a material that calls for attention, backed by a system that bespeaks America's thoroughness.

When America appeared in the world's market Italy did not worry. Her opinion of American production had long since been found, and was not a flattering one. She also had a great opinion about her own production, an opinion that was generally justified by its beauty and by the favor it was enjoying the world over, with the exception of America.

Why America did not buy Italian production did not trouble the Italian mind. But why the world at large did not favor American production set America thinking. Contrary to Italy, America to live and prosper did not need to export her pictures! But that was not the point. The point was to know why she could not sell where other nations did. To know, she sent abroad her commercial and artistic representatives to study and report. She found out that her main fault was with the quality of her production. To sell she had to ameliorate it and to produce plays that could appeal not only to her own folks, but to the world at large. Scruples about the more or less propriety of an artist of established reputation appearing on the screen were easily overcome with dollar arguments, and with the same arguments good plays and everything else was secured. Capital she had aplenty and to organize was her main business. Then America started her campaign knowing beforehand that hers was one of success, for she had studied and knew the wants and necessities of each country which she planned to invade and because her main policy was not one of exploitation but one of sincere cooperation and help. The result was that nowadays the largest part of films in the world bear the American trademark.

Italy was not prepared against an aggressor that possessed by this time all her good points and was so superior to her in the modern system of merchandising. Italy has never taken the pains to send out her agents to study about the conditions of the markets where she was selling, and see whether her production and her way of doing business was meeting the general wants. On the contrary, she has never paid the littlest attentions to the various complaints or suggestions that were pouring in to her from her buyers, especially from the Italians, that in their sincere affection to the mother country were trying to avoid the peril that they were scenting.

Now it is not time to cry, but time to analyze the situation and see which are the best methods to get again a more deserved favor.

From my friends in Europe and South America the report is general that whenever Italian film players like Francesca Bertini, Lydia Borelli, Italia Manzini, Alberto Capozzi, etc., are announced, the theatre is crowded to its utmost. That means that the Italian production is still very well in favor and that the fault for its falling off must be found out, mainly, in her business side.

When all her various companies will have organized in a strong body with a unity of purposes and intent, when she will have understood that her main business is exporting, and that exporting means to work in countries where habits and moral standards are somewhat different from hers, and that there are plenty of ideas that can please people in any latitude without falling into adulteries and exaggerated passional stuffs, when she will have understood that the main point for selling is to know the place where we want to sell, and that beside the public she must please her customers, and be friends with them, and heed their valuable suggestions, and protect their rights, and sell them at prices that must be in proportion to their possibilities, then Italy will have found herself again the favored nation, because she will have learned her lesson.

To cry is useless.

To efficiency, hats off!

DOES ITALY LEAD IN PRODUCING SCREEN THRILLS?

"We wonder if you will agree with us in our statement that American studios cannot touch Italian studios when it comes to the matter of sheer sensation?"

Godfrey Kilroy, proprietor of the Geekay Company, manufacturers' agents in the moving picture business, located in Dublin, Ireland, asks the foregoing question in discussing business conditions in the field in which he operates. We are going to sidestep the issue and pass it along as something interesting to contemplate.

We remember "Cabiria," with its death-defying falls from the high walls of the ancient city. We recall later Italian-made pictures of lesser magnitude which have been released in this market, among them "The Jockey of Death," with a remarkable circus stunt in which a machine gun was used, and which, later in its action brought to the screen a wonderful fire scene with lions, tigers and other jungle animals leaping into a pool with their coats ablaze. And after that release came "The Masque of Life," re-edited for the American market from the original, "The Circus of Death," in which the toying of an almost human chimpanzee with a live baby at the top of a 200-foot factory stack, provided a "sheer sensation" that will not soon be forgotten.

As against these Italian entries, American producers—who consider the moving picture public's taste for "thrills" infinitesimally small as compared with the taste of their European brethren—have features like "The Whip," with its wonderful race between a locomotive and a high-powered automobile; "Stolen Orders," with its aerial combat, in which dirigibles and airplanes were used, and the many sensational serials in which Pearl White has lately been adding to her reputation as a daredevil of the screen.

"Hearts of the World" in Australia.

D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" was given its Australian premiere at the Sydney Theatre Royal, Sydney, N. S. W., November 16th. J. C. Williams, Ltd., control the Australian rights, and the big firm is confident that the picture's appeal will prove tremendous, regardless of the fortunate collapse of the war with whose action it deals.

THREATEN BOYCOTT ON EXCHANGES

English Exhibitors Revive Old-Time Protests Against Unfair Competition When "Hearts of the World" Begins Run in Big Musical Comedy House—British Notes.

London, Eng., Nov. 20.—The exhibition of D. W. Griffith's propaganda play, "Hearts of the World," at the London Palace Theatre, a musical comedy house, has resucitated an old grumble from exhibitors, the principle of showing special pictures at "regular" music halls and theatres in preference to moving picture theatres. It is likely that some drastic move will be made by exhibitors in this country should the practice develop much further. Leeds exhibitors a few weeks ago resolved to launch a general boycott movement against exchanges persisting in what they regard as unfair competition against them, and a similar threat came from Glasgow earlier in the year. The particular complaint against the Palace Theatre venture is that D. W. Griffith's spectacle was the outcome of extraordinary privileges granted him by the war office when in England last year, privileges and facilities undreamed of by any British producer. Any moving picture produced under such auspices, particularly a propaganda picture, it is contended, should find its way to the public through the channels which previous publicity films have been presented and not be subjected to exploitation as an exclusive at a hall ordinarily foreign to the moving picture.

Statements published in the British trade press indicate that the Pathé Company has decided to open studios and start production in England. The opinions held by Charles Pathé on the production and marketing of moving pictures are well known. He was the first European manufacturer to advocate that all stories filmed should be handled so as to comply with the requirements of the American market, and he also was the first, and perhaps the only one, to successfully carry out this plan. He has always maintained that no world-wide film organization could subsist without a solid footing in the United States and Canada.

If this is not a purely national venture, and Mr. Pathé really thinks that international results on a large scale can be obtained from the other side of the Atlantic, the producing experiment in Great Britain should be closely watched by all manufacturers.

One of our most active producing concerns at the moment is the British Actors' Film Co., which has secured a formidable list of works of notable authors to be done in celluloid. Of necessity a number of these will be post-war undertakings, but meanwhile productions already started—and they number over a dozen—will be completed forthwith. The proprietary interest of the B. A. F. Co. is vested for the most part in a number of famous actors and actresses and a few authors, Lauvi De Frece, Henry Esmond, A. E. Matthews, Robt. Hale, Geo. Tully, Owen Naves and Fay Compton, to mention a handful, and naturally holds a valuable lien on their services.

The Stoll Film Co., the departure of Oswald Stoll, vaudeville magnate, into the moving picture industry, having acquired sufficient productions to engage its exchanges in business as renters of films, now turns its attention to the manufacture of moving pictures. A studio has been rented, and its first effort is a story from the pen of Louis N. Parker entitled "Comrades in Arms." Apart from his extensive theatrical interests, Oswald Stoll is now exhibitor, renter and manufacturer of moving pictures.

In deference to requests from soldiers home on leave and from the public who were unable to follow the film in serial form, Film Booking Offices, Ltd., are arranging bookings of Ambassador Gerard's "Four Years in Germany" complete on one program. The New Gallery Kinema in Regent street featured it this way early in October, and there are several subsequent bookings in the West End and suburbs, nothwithstanding its record as a ten-part serial of nearly 500 bookings in the country.

The U. S. A. Committee of Public Information is cooperating with our Minister of Information in the distribution in Europe of American made propaganda subjects. The first, "America's Answer to the Hun," has already had an extensive showing at home, and which is more important an enthusiastic reception on the Continent, especially Holland.—Sutcliffe.

NEW WAR TIME TAX IN AUSTRALIA

One Penny Tariff Levied on Lower Priced Admissions to Make Up Threatened Deficits—"Snowy" Baker Feature Given Premier in Sydney

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, Oct. 12.—In the House of Representatives on Thursday of this week, the Acing Prime Minister, W. A. Watt, moved a resolution to provide for the imposition of a tax of one penny on all entertainment admissions not exceeding one shilling. He said that this tax was part of the new taxation policy rendered necessary by the increasing burden for interest on war loans. At present admissions of sixpense and under were not liable to tax, but tickets over 6d. but under 1/- paid one penny. The number of amusements was increasing, the taxable entertainments for the year 1917-18 being 2 per cent. more than in the previous year. During last year the tax yielded a revenue of £250,000, but in the present year, without any increase in the rate, it was expected that the return would only be £200,000, chiefly owing to the curtailment of certain entertainments, notably horseracing and boxing. The effect of the resolution was that all admissions up to and inclusive of 6d. would in future pay a tax of one penny. At the present time no alteration was proposed in the higher rates, though this might be necessary at no very distant date. Entertainments for children exclusively were not liable for taxation at present, and would not be taxed under this proposal. Mr. Watt went on to say that while entertainments were beneficial in many ways, they were a luxury in wartime, and a fair subject for taxation. He was of the opinion that tickets up to 1/- could easily pay the proposed tax. In framing the financial proposal this year, the Government realized that provisions had to preserved which must inevitably be enforced next year, whether the war was over or not.

The leader of the Opposition, Mr. Tudor, said that the tax on a 3d. ticket amounted to 33 per cent., which was unfair, as for many large families the picture theatre was the only entertainment.

After discussion the motion in favor of the tax was passed by 34 votes to 14.

"The Lure of the Bush," a five-part feature with the noted Australian all-round athlete, R. L. (Snowy) Beker, in the leading role, has been released in Sydney, where it has created a very favorable impression. The production was directed by Claude Flemming, an Australian, recently from America, after an absence of several years.

The Austral Photoplay Co., Ltd., will release shortly a five-part photoplay entitled "Scars of Love", details of which will be given later. This firm has taken over the Victoria Theatre, Sydney, and has renamed it the "Kookooburra." The new management will screen only high-class locally made productions, the initial attraction being "The Burke and Wills Expedition," a dramatized version of the well-known historical event This production was made about a year ago by the Antipodes Film Co., though it has never been released. Other coming attractions include "The Life of Adam Lindsay Gordon," another semi-historical subject, this film depicting the life story of the famous poet, and "Scars of Love."

Australasian Flms, Ltd., has secured the Australian rights to the Mabel Normand feature "Mickey," the foreign rights of which are controlled by the Western Import Company, of New York.

The Co-operative Film Exchange is making a special feature of Metro's "Lest We Forget," and has secured the Sydney Town Hall for a special short season.

The Essanay feature "On Trial" is drawing tremendous business this week, running at the Crystal Palace and Strand theatres, the two largest metropolitan theatres in the Union Theatres, Ltd., circuit.

J. C. Williamson Flms, Ltd., has secured the sole Australian rights to the product of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, and will release these films at their many picture theatres throughout the country. The same firm also announces the early release of Griffith's Heart of the World."—Imrie.

Little Talks With Foreign Buyers—No. 20

By

President

BUYERS of "THE VICTIM" WILL BE SURE TO PURCHASE "THE TRANSGRESSOR"

(They will thank the day they read this Talk no less than that on which "No. 13" appeared in The World)

"THE TRANSGRESSOR" is by the producers of the very successful "VICTIM." Therefore we took over the foreign rights eagerly. Especially when inspection showed just as "punchy" a picture. IT IS SUITED TO THE TIMES, as it warns against the extremists of all kinds that the governments and peoples of all lands regard with disfavor: it calls for social reform, but of the sensible sort. Like "THE VICTIM" it may be worked with Church endorsement, or just as a rattling good theatre thriller. The mob scenes in this picture are said to be the most thrilling ever shown in a melodrama made in the United States.

Little Talk No. 13

A SPECIAL OPPORTUNITY

"THE VICTIM"

INTER-OCEAN has been selected to distribute in all foreign markets a feature play of such unique dramatic appeal that a trial showing has already resulted in several sales. TO SEE "THE VICTIM" IS TO WANT TO EXPLOIT IT. The effect on the spectator is simply tremendous. It is a "repeat" picture. Even the veteran buyer—the "wise" film man wants a second look. It is just punch! Punch! PUNCH! The priestly hero, in facing the electric chair, risks all for a principle and we all of us care for that sort of chap. The picture is an absolute succession of thrills. THERE HAS NEVER BEEN A MELODRAMA LIKE IT! And it challenges solution up to the last few feet of the sizzling finish. Can be worked as a "special," with Church endorsement, or just as a rattling good theatre thriller.

The product of America's greatest lens specialists, who have been producing high grade lenses of one type or another for 65 years, they are unexcelled in the clear-cut, evenly illuminated pictures they produce on the screen.

Because of the demand made upon our resources for some of the Government's most important military needs, we are unable to make projection lens deliveries for the present. While proud to be of such service in this world crisis, we shall expect to serve our other patrons even more efficiently than before, when the world is again at peace.

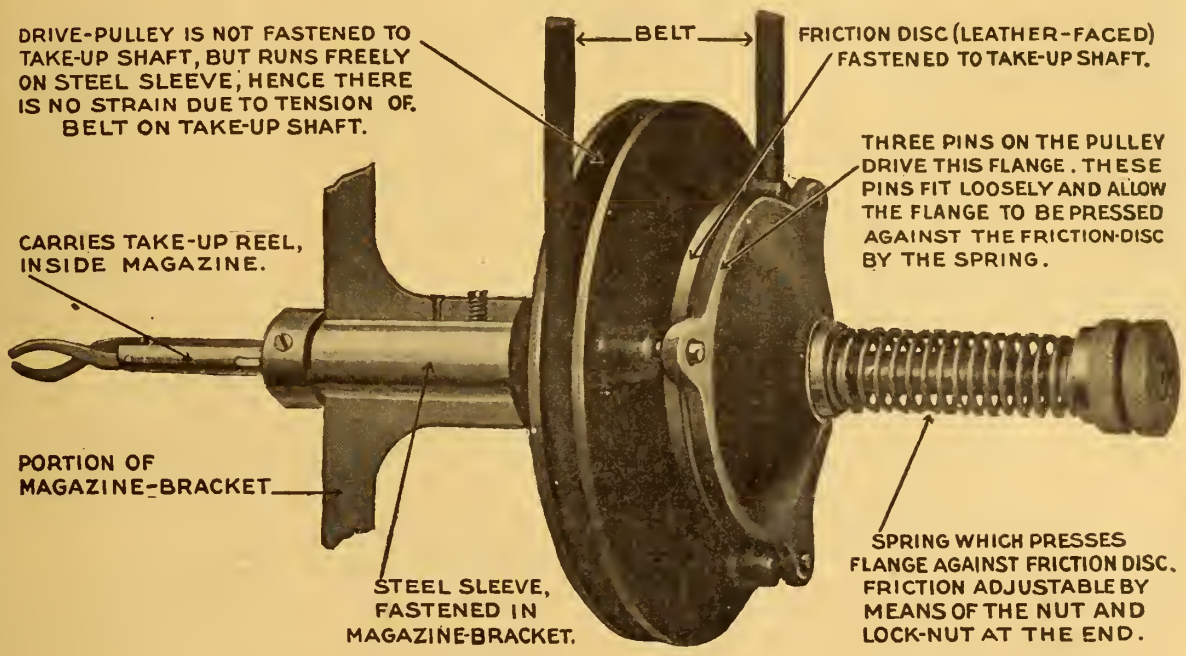
Simplex

There are two ways of designing a Take-up Shaft



DRIVE-PULLEY IS NOT FASTENED TO TAKE-UP SHAFT, BUT RUNS FREELY ON STEEL SLEEVE, HENCE THERE IS NO STRAIN DUE TO TENSION OF BELT ON TAKE-UP SHAFT.
BELT
FRICTION DISC (LEATHER-FACED) FASTENED TO TAKE-UP SHAFT.
THREE PINS ON THE PULLEY DRIVE THIS FLANGE. THESE PINS FIT LOOSELY AND ALLOW THE FLANGE TO BE PRESSED AGAINST THE FRICTION-DISC BY THE SPRING.
CARRIES TAKE-UP REEL, INSIDE MAGAZINE.
PORTION OF MAGAZINE-BRACKET
STEEL SLEEVE, FASTENED IN MAGAZINE-BRACKET.
SPRING WHICH PRESSES FLANGE AGAINST FRICTION DISC. FRICTION ADJUSTABLE BY MEANS OF THE NUT AND LOCK-NUT AT THE END.

There's no need of telling the Operator that the Take-up Shaft is a mighty important part of a Projector.

It absolutely must not fail him; and to be proof against going back on him it must be designed right in the first place.

Now, there are two ways of designing a Take-up Shaft.

One way is to design it wrong, to have the belt pull sideways on the shaft, cramping it in its bearings, and then to try to overcome the difficulty by introducing ball bearings.

The other way is to design it correct in principle, like the Simplex Take-up Shaft here illustrated.

When you read the explanations you will quickly see that the belt-pull doesn't come on the shaft at all; so there's no cramping or friction to try to reduce by "anti-friction" bearings.

And, as you know, the probability of any piece of mechanism going wrong increases directly as the number of parts it contains. So, being extremely simple as well as free from blunders in design, the Simplex Take-up Shaft is dependable in the highest degree.

The Simplex wins because it is correct both in principle and in construction

Projectionist Ray says

"Last week our film service suddenly froze up on us.

"We finally got hold of a two reeler—comedy stuff—which looked as tho it had been run through a coffee mill and then patched with chewing gum.

"Did the best I could with it and then ran it through my Cameragraph for a try out. It lost the lower loop over 50 times but each time the loop setter instantly re-set it so that it ran without a hitch.

"Emergency work! That's Power's! When a thing like that happens to you, you'll NEED the Power's Loop Setter mighty bad; it's an instant, certain remedy.

"This device is only found on Power's Cameragraph, the projector of distinction."

This Picture Would Be Long Enough to Measure Circumference of Earth

We had been watching both the public and motion picture exhibitors take each new Fox production—mark it with the sign manual of success—and then wait expectantly for the next.

We, like them, saw only the individual pictures and didn't grasp the magnitude of the whole, big, vast institution grown up around the successful Fox Idea.

When William Fox began producing some five years ago even he, with his great dreams of the future, had no shadow of a thought that the Fox Film Corporation would become the tremendous institution that it is—particularly in so short a time.

No one foresaw that Fox pictures would be seen in every part of the globe—that countless millions of people would become patrons of the Fox Idea of the photoplay—not only here in this country, but in almost every section of Europe, of Asia, of Africa, of South America, of Australasia.

William Fox has been busy producing month after month, year after year, until he has a record of pictures behind him that, in quality and quantity, is the real wonder of the moving-picture business.

F O X
FILM CORPORATION

It Measures Likewise The Ever-Increasing Scope of the Fox Idea

The quality of the Fox pictures is proved by the astounding Fox success.

As to their quantity—well, up to date, Fox productions, if made into one picture, would have a footage of 200,284,160 feet or 38,000 miles, enough to reach around the earth with thirteen thousand miles of film left over.

This one picture would take a grind of five years and eight months, or over fifty thousand hours, to run—think of it!—a picture of more than two hundred thousand reels.

Does that give you any conception of the vastness of the productive growth and success of the Fox Idea?

On the basis of the Fox Idea—to give the public what it wants — William Fox has built up an edifice so stupendous in size that it is difficult to grasp its proportions.

The public has put its mark of approval on the Fox Idea as expressed in Fox pictures.

The public has made Fox success.

The public will make your success—with Fox pictures.

F O X
FILM CORPORATION

It Would Take a Grind
Of 5 Years and 8 Months
To Show This Picture

Of course, it's a Fox film.

For whenever the unusual, amazing or extraordinary is done in photoplay production, 'most everybody who knows the film business just naturally says one word—"Fox."

Up to a year or so ago the photoplay world and the public were amazed at each new Fox film surprise.

Now they take each Fox surprise as a matter of course.

"The Fox way of doing things," they say, and look forward to the next.

William Fox has just gone on producing one surprise after another, until he has set a "surprise" standard of production.

So that motion-picture exhibitors and the public have become so used to the unusual from William Fox that they refuse to be surprised any more—at anything he does.

They just demand his films—and let it go at that.

True—the demand is progressive—is growing bigger and more insistent from day to day, from week to week, from month to month.

Until now—the demand is so vast that the question is—which exhibitor can get Fox productions first.

F O X
FILM CORPORATION

Its Footage Would Be
More Than 38,000 Miles
Filling 200,000 Reels

All this great success is very gratifying.

The public appreciates and wants Fox pictures—that's all William Fox is interested in.

The exhibitors, with their wise fingers on the public pulse, are showing Fox pictures whenever they can get them.

We congratulate these exhibitors on their sagacity—we thank them for their generous support and encouragement.

But—how many people fully realize the stupendous achievement that is the result of the Fox Idea in motion pictures?

Even we—including Mr. Fox himself—didn't fully realize it until we found time to sit back for a few days during the recent non-release period.

Then it dawned on us that we had the greatest moving-picture business in the world.

If You Don't Like Louis Bennison You Are Not Human

THE NEW YORK TIMES says this through its critic—strong words indeed for a great conservative newspaper.

An actor's scrapbook usually reveals his real personality; you can read what authoritative critics have said of him and accurately foretell his future success.

Every able, reputable critic in the larger cities of the country has unreservedly praised Louis Bennison and predicted his future as a screen favorite. In Exhibitors in every Goldwyn branch zone have been invited to trade showings to "meet Louis Bennison." The immediate results of these showings have been a heavy volume of signed contracts.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

Write Your Own Ticket on a Comedian—

FIRST, he must be comic. He must be wholesome. He must be genuine. He need not seek to conquer the world in one picture, for if he does he will be forced and unnatural.

Naturalness and cleanliness are the elements you seek most.

Then you demand freshness, novelty, zest. These are the specifications that every exhibitor who knows his business and understands his public would write if he planned to make his own comedies for his own audiences.

And every thing we have here written is found in likable, laughable, happy-go-lucky

You who read this are an exhibitor yourself. You know exhibitors. You know that not many of you write letters of praise. The exhibitor mind has worked out a rule that it doesn't pay exhibitors to tell a producer how much they like a star or a production.

But despite this, of the 2,900 exhibitors who are now playing Capitol Comedies easily 1,500 customers have written to Goldwyn saying: "I like the Capitol Comedies and my audiences are growing to like "Smiling Bill" Parsons more every day."

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

Do You Know the Real Idea Behind the Ford Educational Weekly?

LET us talk together, exhibitor and distributor, like "regular people" about the Ford Educational Weekly and the reasons both for its existence and its success.

Every great newspaper in America—every one that is rated as a successful, big money-maker—is founded upon human interest and mass appeal.

There is not a class daily paper in America with a tremendous circulation. The class dailies written for the minds of the select few have circulations ranging from 22,000 to 75,000 maximum a day.

But the papers that are built for the public taste—what a difference! There are two million-copy circulations in New York; one 448,000 daily circulation in Philadelphia; three in excess of 400,000 each daily in Chicago.

Our reason for telling you this is to give you the real reason for the success and the tremendously widespread distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly.

It is built for the American public. It is frank, open, interesting, human, vivid. It answers the multitude of questions the average alert American asks.

Goldwyn, as you have read in previous announcements, assumes the exclusive American distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly beginning with the first issue of January 12, 1919. We are frankly proud to be the marketing or releasing mechanism for this altruistic product of the greatest industrial captain in our national life.

HARRY T. MOREY IN "Hoarded Assets"

SECOND RELEASE OF THE HARRY T. MOREY STAR SERIES

From the Story of the Same Title By Raymond S. Spears Directed by Paul Scardon

HE was only a river pirate—and he was in love with a showgirl who was "playing for big money." And when he heard of the big gold shipment headed up the river at dusk, he believed that here was his chance to make his big haul and quit the old life forever.

By a cleverly devised plan, Jerry substituted twenty kegs of sand for the twenty kegs of gold in the shipment and buried the kegs in a cove up the river. Then he started to go honest—just as an alibi, at first.

And then his big man's heart told him that it was only circumstances of environment that had ever made him dishonest. Once he tasted of the comfort and security of honesty, he knew he could never go back to the old life. But there was the buried gold shipment—what of that? And what of the money needed to buy the things that he believed his wife craved?

Here is a real screen story holding every element of human appeal. And as the rugged river pirate, Harry Morey finds a role for which he is eminently fitted by physique and screen personality.

When Marguerite Clark Raises Chickens!

WITH a few hens and a rooster she tried to frighten the wolf from the door—and you know how difficult it is for chickens to frighten a wolf!

In the midst of it all the incubator broke.

Did she sit down and cry? She did not! She took the eggs to bed with her and in the morning there they were, a whole family of little chicks.

When last seen, the wolf, his tail between his legs, was seen fleeing, scared to death, over the hill.

So will "Little Miss Hoover" chase bad business.

The Villain Said the Hero was a Crook!

REMEMBER how it was in the play? Everybody does, for everybody has seen "Arizona" on the stage.

What suspense! What excitement when Lieutenant Denton started to square things with the heavy!

That was on a small stage in front of painted scenery. And even there it was a tremendous scene.

But imagine what happens when Douglas Fairbanks is the hero and he has all of the state of Arizona for the stage upon which to give the villain what's coming to him!

As surely as Douglas Fairbanks beats the villain, so will "Arizona" beat all your box-office records.

SELLS TICKETS ON "$ DAY" PLAN

Manager Griffith of Poli's, Meriden, Conn., Borrows $311.90 from Mr. and Mrs. Patron, Using Familiar Merchandising Scheme—Built Up Lagging Matinee Business

THE "Dollar Day," which has been so successfully exploited as a means of community merchandising throughout the country, has again been applied to the moving picture business. Walter L. Griffith, manager of Poli's Theatre, Meriden, Conn., is the man who has achieved with great success attending, the coupling of the Dollar ($) Sign with a "drive" to sell admissions. Through the courtesy of Manager Griffith and aided by excerpts from the Meriden Daily Journal we are able to present for the benefit of exhibitor-subscribers to The World a detailed explanation of the plan.

For several years, as many of our readers know, merchants of many communities have co-operated in "Dollar Days," when $1 would buy, on those special days, or at specific hours, more than the same money could buy, in value, at any other time. In some towns "Dollar Day" is made a gala affair. Streets are decorated, "free vaudeville" attractions are provided, bands are hired to furnish music, and the event is generally "circused" to bring into the town residents of the surrounding country side.

Griffith Works By Himself.

In Meriden, Manager Griffith had none of these "extras" to help along his scheme. He established his own "$ Day," advertised it in the papers and by "throw-aways," boomed it all he could in every way, and on December 11 the Journal had this to say:

The "Dollar Day" plan which Manager Walter Griffith of Poli's Theatre will put into effect today is something entirely new in the theatrical business. The plan has already attracted advertising firms out of the city, and yesterday a representative of the Roebling system called on Mr. Griffith to find out about it. He stated that he had been instructed to watch the plan and make a report.

The present slow process of selling theatre tickets and the consequent inconvenience to patrons who have to wait in line before entering the theatre caused Mr. Griffith to think up a plan to obviate this nuisance.

Time and Money Saving Plan.

The selling of tickets now requires twice the time that it did before the war tax was imposed upon tickets. In making change the cashier must use pennies, so that the time consumed in making change is doubled, as it is very seldom that patrons present the correct amount at the box office, since the passage of the law requiring the collection of the war tax.

The meal ticket and mileage book ideas are familiar to everyone, and Mr. Griffith's plan is similar in scope. It saves time for the patron, and at the same time it is a benefit to the management inasmuch as people are not kept in line, out on the sidewalk, thereby discouraging others from attempting to enter.

If people will avail themselves of the offer made and buy a supply of theatre tickets today, they will avoid the congestion, and at the same time make a saving, as there will be quite a saving under the new plan.

The only dollar sale which is contemplated is the one for matinee and night gallery tickets. The other sales proposed are for $1.04 and 90 cents. The plan derives its name from the first of the three offers which are made.

Twenty matinee or night gallery tickets will be sold for $1, the usual price being $2.20 for these 20 tickets. Mr. Griffith explained that the reason for this more than 50 per cent. reduction is that the attendance at matinees is not usually anywhere near the capacity of the house. These 20 tickets, including the war tax, will cost but $1.

The second offer is seven 17-cent evening tickets for $1.04, which is a saving of 15 cents, and the third offer is five 22-cent evening tickets for 90 cents, which is a saving of 20 cents.

All of these tickets are good for their face value, 5 cents, 17 cents or 22 cents, to apply on the cash value of tickets to any performance which is given by the management at Poli's Theatre.

Walter L. Griffith.

Griffith Explains in Detail.

From Manager Griffith we have received other details that will be of aid to exhibitors in "putting over" the scheme. "Our idea," says Mr. Griffith in his letter, "was to increase the matinee attendance—but we could not conflict with our better seat-sales by offering a reduced admission scale to interfere with the higher priced clientele we are catering to. But Uncle Sam has something to say about admissions these days and so we figured out a plan whereby we would pay the tax and still offer 'bargains.'

"Our plan was divided into three offers, as follows: twenty matinee or night gallery tickets for $1 (would cost $2.20); 7 evening tickets (17 cents) for $1.04 (would cost $1.19); 5 evening tickets (22 cents) for 90 cents (would cost $1.10)—war tax paid in all offers. We opened the box office at 10 A. M. and sold until the theatre closed. The gross over our regular day's business was $311.90!

"What does that mean to a manager? Just go to the bank and try to borrow $311.90, and they will let you have it at bank interest with security that must be acceptable to them. We borrowed from our public $311.90 and nothing said about the interest. And Wednesday, December 11, was one of the most disagreeable days we have had this winter!

Matinee Business Benefited.

"We have watched very carefully the outcome of the sale as affecting matinee business, and it has been a benefit. Only a few days have elapsed (Mr. Griffith wrote The World on December 14), but our cash business has increased and our theatre is filled better than it has been at matinees. This only proves that if they get them in their pockets they will either use them or give them away—like the man who buys three cigars, intending to smoke them all himself. The matinee ticket drew the best, and that was just what we wanted it to do—fill our house afternoons.

"Here is how we operated, serving out the 20 matinee or night gallery admissions, paying the war tax, and getting $1. We take eight regular tickets from the matinee roll (that is if you want the gross of your sale to apply to your regular day's business), and to this we add 12 of the Special Tickets. From this sale of 8 tickets we receive the regular price (10 cents) with war-tax added, which totals 88 cents. This leaves us 12 cents that we are collecting from Mr. and Mrs. Public to pay for the twelve additional courtesies which Uncle Sam requires.

"The night inducements are on the same principle, only we add one ticket. The nearest we could come to even money was 7 tickets (17 cents) for $1.04, and we wondered if it would detract from the idea. But it did not and it went along with the Dollar Day idea all right. The five 22 cent tickets for 90 cents was another price away from the Dollar scheme, but it worked fine. In the last two graduations of prices we did not need the extra draft, but to go through with the idea we went ahead as shown.

Kept the $ Sign Before the Public.

"In all the display we used or wherever we could get the slogan before the public eye we said: 'You'll Be There; Poli's $ Day'—using the $ sign prominently. In our 'readers', on throw-aways, in store-window cards and everywhere, we stuck the '$ Day' slogan before the eye of the public. We made a special trip to the city editor of the Journal and 'planted' the story we were anxious to get.

"So well are we satisfied that we are after it again, in the worst week in the theatrical year—the week before Christmas. But in all the 'boosting' we do, for this Christmas sale, will be the idea of 'Christmas Presents'—advising that the ladies cut out the green neck ties, handkerchiefs and cheap perfumery and give hubby something that she can help him use. Tickets are to be sold in nice envelopes, holly and all that on the outside, making it a regular Christmas present."

Clark Moves to East to Direct Exhibitors Mutual

WILLIAM J. CLARK, president of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation and vice president of Affiliated Distributors Corporation, has resigned as president of the William J. Clark.

City Commission of Grand Rapids, Michigan, to come to New York to direct the activities of Exhibitors Mutual. He became president of Exhibitors Mutual upon the recent reorganization of the Mutual Film Corporation when a group of exhibitors acquired the ownership and control of the Mutual exchanges.

Mr. Clark entered the field of distribution as vice president and general manager of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, which was organized last spring. Early in November exhibitor interests acquired control of the Mutual exchanges.

Mr. Clark has been for a long time a practical exhibitor. He has for a number of years personally directed the Consolidated Theatres of Grand Rapids, which owns the Majestic Gardens, Strand, Orpheum, Idle Hour and Original, all downtown theatres and every one a successful house.

Mr. Clark's other interests are extensive. He is president of the Little Rock Lumber and Manufacturing Company, Little Rock, Ark.; president of the Clay Brick Company of Grand Rapids, Mich.; president of the Surety Land Company of Grand Rapids; vice president and secretary of Consolidated Theatres, Grand Rapids; treasurer of the Kent Storage Company, Grand Rapids; treasurer of the Sanitary Milk Company, Grand Rapids, and a director of the Grand Rapids Ice and Coal Company and the Commercial Savings Bank of Grand Rapids. He is a Shriner and has filled all the offices of the Masonic order up to Potentate of the Shrine.

Mr. Clark plans to move to New York immediately after the first of the new year and establish his home in New York City.

Rothacker Insures Employes.

W. R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Manufacturing Company of Chicago, after spending a few days in New York and its vicinity, boarded his train for "back home" on December 19. His business here consisted chiefly in supervising the making of some industrial films in New Jersey. The Rothacker plant in Chicago is well known as one of the largest and most prosperous moving picture plants in the country, being continually busy with films of either a novel or educational value. His latest series of pictures, known as the Outdoor Series, is being handled by the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation. One of the most attractive of these, "Peaks, Parks and Pines," was the featured educational number of a recent program of the Rialto Theatre, New York.

Mr. Rothacker, apart from his business interests in the east, was absorbed in a plan of practical benefit for his several hundred employes. In place of the usual gold piece bonus he is presenting each and every one of them with a life insurance policy on which he pays the premium for the period of time which they remain in his employ. These policies range from $500 to $1,800.

Phillips Picture Goes to Broadway.

Jewel Productions, Inc., has announced the opening of the premiere showing of its master picture, "The Heart of Humanity," at the Broadway Theatre, New York, Sunday, December 22. The film will remain at the theatre indefinitely and will be presented with elaborate musical accompaniment and stage effects. Manager Kashin is making extensive preparations for the showing and expects to boost it with many original advertising stunts.

The premiere public showing will be preceded on Friday, December 20, by a special showing for critics, at which Dorothy Phillips, star of the production, and her husband, Allen Holubar, who created it, will be present.

"America's Answer" Booking Well.

Although the war is over, it is the experience of exhibitors that there is no lessening of the demand of the public for official war pictures. This is shown in the remarkable record of bookings for "America's Answer," the second official United States war picture.

The picture was first shown officially in New York in July, after which official presentations were made in a number of the principal cities. It was released through the World Film October 11.

Up to the present time "America's Answer" has played in 1,819 theatres and contracts are made for its exhibition in 3,204 other theatres. Contracts are now being made at the rate of 150 or 200 each week.

RUFFNER SEES NEW YORK AND TALKS

After Tasting the Ocean and Finding It Salt, He Drops In on Associated Advertisers and Relieves Pent-Up Feelings, to the Edification of His Hosts

SUNDAY morning Ralph Ruffner, of the Rialto, Butte, Montana, solemnly stalked across the somewhat soiled sands of Coney Island. Having dipped his hand in the water and tasted it, to assure himself that it was salt, he figured out that at last he had completed his journey from ocean to ocean. Just a week before (allowing for the difference in time) Ruff had hustled out from between the sheets in the early morning to take from a messenger a telegram from J. Von Herberg, of Jensen and Von Herberg, telling him to meet the boss for a trip to New York. Mr. Von Herberg was coming on business, but Ruffner's transportation had "For a Good Boy" marked on it, like the china mugs that we used to get—well, some time ago.

They came into New York in a baby blizzard Wednesday December 11, and registered at the Claridge. Then Ruff started out to see New York. Thursday he was invited to attend a meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and Ruff surely was among those present on the occasion of that luncheon. He had never met most of the press agents who comprise the association, but he had been in correspondence with most of them, and he had much additional to say. He said it—not all of it, but as much as he could think of on such short notice, and about as much as he could get rid of between luncheon and dinner.

Meets the Men He Was Looking For.

He was too much in earnest to say polite nothings and let it go at that. For years he has been on the other end of the wire trying to get cuts and stills and other helps with which to get his pictures over. Around the table was the man who had sent him one stingy two-inch hard rubber cut with which to advertise a sensational picture. Another man represented a firm which had no newspaper stills for a picture version of a best seller, and took an encore twice on the same stunt. A third had sent him such a mass of junk for a high priced picture that he put it on top of the safe and did the best he could with what he could get from this paper.

They were all friends of his—more or less—and he had a nice, long chat with them. It's safe to say that the publicity men of the picture business never got so much information about their shortcomings in the same brief space of time, and it wasn't in the form of a letter they could drop into the waste basket with some comment on the "damned fool exhibitors." This was a personal message that had not improved any with being so long stored up.

Ruffner a Practical Man.

Ruffner is probably the most practical man who ever addressed the meeting. He knows the film game from the 300-seat dump to the high-grade theatres, and he told them a complete earful, though he regretted later that he had not had warning of what was coming that he might have prepared his ideas more carefully and covered the ground more completely. He said plenty, as it was, and gave them all food for thought—if they will only think it over.

Mr. Ruffner prefaced his talk to the association by saying that there probably was not an advertising or publicity man present whom he had not "cussed fifty ways from Sunday" at some time within the last ten years.

"Time after time," declared the exhibitor, "I have booked features for the Rialto at Butte, or for others of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses, only to find that my show was doomed to failure if I depended upon the so-called 'advertising and publicity helps' you fellows had prepared for it. You have sent out illustrations that were impossible from an exhibitor standpoint. You prepared ads of from 50 to 300 words in length that might contain a phrase or catch line of five words, buried somewhere in the text, which I could use exactly as you had written it. The posters, particularly the one-sheets and three-sheets, invariably pictured, in two figures clutched in an embrace, some title like 'The Deathless Woman' or 'War's End.' I have had to resort to all kinds of substitutes for posters, ad copy illustrations, text matter, publicity stories, and lobby display matter, just because you fellows back here in New York didn't know what the exhibitor needed.

Hard to Get the Right Stills.

"I have booked big special feature productions, confident that I would have a good selection of advertising and publicity matter from which to build up my local campaign. Instead of having a set of twenty-five or more black and white stills to choose from, I have considered myself lucky if there were ten of them that were worth consideration.

"As an exhibitor, I know that it is just as important for me to have a strong, appealing advertising and publicity campaign on each production I show as it is for me to make certain that the productions themselves are up to standard in quality and entertainment value.

"Black and white illustrations are the most important of the ad material I use. You fellows present here should insist that you are provided with an adequate number of worthwhile stills on each picture. It means a great deal to the exhibitor. Newspaper advertising copy without illustration is only 50 per cent. productive. I do not use half-tone cuts except in rare instances. They do not reproduce well on newspaper stock, and with the coarse screen necessary they usually result in a blur or black splotch which destroys completely the effect and appearance of the copy of which they are a part. Line illustrations are much more practicable, and the printed result is infinitely superior.

Posters Can Be Improved Too.

"There is a big opportunity for improvement in posters. I believe that other exhibitors agree with me that a well printed lithograph of the head of the star is worth ten illustrations of two and three person groups, doing nothing in particular that can be related to the title of the production. I have seen many posters that were absolutely worthless to me because their pictorial parts were without subject matter which the farthest stretch of imagination could identify as having to do with the action or story implied by the main title of the release.

"The prepared reviews printed in the press books some of you write are a decided help. Very often the local newspapers will request a review. I am usually very busy, and to write one properly takes time. If I can take the press book, clip out a prepared review and have it copied, I am getting practical service.

"The average story published in the press books for exhibitors to 'clip and hand to the editor' is worthless. There is too much bunk in it. If you can supply but two or three stories for every production, and have each of them contain news about the star or the story, limit yourself to that, because anything more is thrown away.

Take Care of Small Town Man.

"It would be unfair for you to gauge your work entirely by my wants from you as an exhibitor. In a city the size of Butte we have advertising and publicity facilities that are not available to exhibitors in smaller places. I can buy art work of a kind, if it is necessary. I can employ ad writers if I am too busy to prepare copy. Let the small town exhibitor predominate in your consideration of exhibitor wants, and in working to equip him thoroughly, you will more than satisfy managers like myself.

"Some producers are apparently very vain and egotistical. They have their names plastered all over the posters and prepared ads, and threaded through the publicity stories like strings of scarlet. As an exhibitor I do not try to sell the public in Butte the name of a producer. I try, instead, to sell them the star and the story of each picture. And every time I get a prepared ad, a newspaper story, or a lithograph from which I can eliminate the name of the producer I do it. If it is impossible to eliminate it I am very apt not to use it at all.

No Use for Superlatives.

"Trade journal advertising to exhibitors amuses me. It is loaded with superlatives and adjectives. Every production, seemingly, is a wonderful picture, a sure winner at the box office, the biggest of the year, the most stupendous ever made, a riot for action, featuring the screen's most beautiful woman or pictureland's greatest male actor. I first look through the advertising sections of a trade paper for announcements of new pictures. I pay no attention to what the producer says about them. I want to know the title, the name of the star, or lead. Then I decide whether it is worth looking at as a prospective booking.

"I always read the editorial pages. They give me the pulse of the industry. Then I turn to the reviews, and if there are any productions in which I am interested for the Rialto, I compare the various criticisms. I look through the projection and music departments to find out whether there is anything new that I can refer to my operators or orchestra. After this I go through the news and text sections, searching for stories about how other exhibitors are handling productions. Quite often I get good ideas from such stories. Sometimes I find a good story sent out by a manufacturer or distributor as publicity, but not very often. It seems to me that this sort of bunk could be dispensed with in favor of things more valuable and interesting. None of it is convincing.

Direct-by-Mail Matter Wasted.

"There is a big item of waste in the tremendous quantities of direct-by-mail matter sent to exhibitors by producers and distributors. My desk is covered with it almost every morning. I used to make an effort to go through it, but there was hardly ever anything in any of it that had not been covered by a story or an ad in the trade papers or house organs. So now I consign it all to the waste basket without trying to go through it.

"I always pay particular attention to house organs. This is about the only advertising matter I receive in the mail that has any reason or excuse for its existence. You will frequently publish in your respective house organs information about forthcoming productions, perhaps a catch line I can use for advertising purposes, or a short discriptive story of the picture itself.

"One of the most common experiences I have, and one that is always discouraging, is to pore over a press sheet, making memoranda of the numbers of various black and white ad cuts you have prepared for my use, and noting other necessaries I may want, and then writing and mailing to the exchange an order for the material, to get a reply, sometimes only after I have waited a reasonable length of time and then wired a request for an answer, to be told that they do not have it in stock. Of what use is it for you to work hard in preparing exhibitor campaigns only to have your exchanges fail to put in a stock of the accessories?

"The industry is fast approaching the time when exhibitors will not have a tremendous number of feature productions to work with in the daily and triweekly change system. They will have to play their bookings to longer runs. And that means that they will be obliged to intensify their ability as showmen and do better advertising and publicity work in their respective localities. When that time comes you gentlemen will find that the exhibitors will be much more dependent upon you for assistance, and that the demand for practical, beneficial advertising and publicity helps will be much greater."

Comments Favorably on Theatres Here.

Mr. Ruffner did not visit many theatres, for he was too busy, but he did manage to make most of the leaders, and his comment was generally favorable. "We do not have as large orchestras as you have on here," he said, "but the houses are about the same, though I think the western houses lay more stress upon real courtesy to the patron. We try to make them feel at home with small acts of service. For example, in one house I visited, six ushers watched me struggle into my overcoat with polite interest. Out west one of them would have helped me into it, as there were no incoming patrons at the time. In these little things I believe that the western houses are ahead. I was surprised to note the small spaces taken in the daily papers. Where we have but two or three in a town and with liberal space rates, we use large spaces. I can understand that here with prices so large and so many papers to be used there is not the same opportunity for effective newspaper work, but it looks strange to the westerner.

Lights on Broadway Appeal.

"The electric signs are wonderful. I don't mean just the theatrical signs, but the announcements generally. It is a treat to walk up and down Broadway at night. I'm glad that I did not hit town while the Fuel Administration was on the job. I should have lost half my visit."

That's about all Ruff had to say, for publication or otherwise, and Mr. Von Herberg was even less communicative, contenting himself with remarking that chaperoning Ruff was like taking a small boy to the circus. That just about describes it. Ruff was frankly interested in everything he saw or did, and he saw and did much. Most everything he saw he had already seen in the pictures, for the news weeklies have made New York more familiar to the out of town patron than to the resident New Yorker, but he was glad to see the real thing instead of the pictured places, and the press agents were not actuated by a sense of policy in their eagerness to entertain him, for Ruffner is a very genuine sort of chap, clean-cut, likable, modest and with none of the breeziness that marks his advertising. He is real folks, and both he and his many hosts enjoyed every moment of his stay.

October Admission Tax $4,443,265.10.

Taxes collected on admissions to theatres, etc., during the month of October, under the war revenue act, totaled $4,443,265.10, according to a report just made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. This brings the collections from this item for the four months from July to October, inclusive, to $15,309,359.54, which is exceeded by only two other taxes collected under this bill—those on freight and personal transportation.

To the MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY---GREETINGS

AT the end of a year of many difficulties overcome and problems solved; of many hopes deferred and disappointments manfully endured, may the joys of Christmastide restore your faith and confidence and renew your determination to enter upon the ventures of a New Year with that spirit of optimism which begets success.

To this end we bespeak for you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

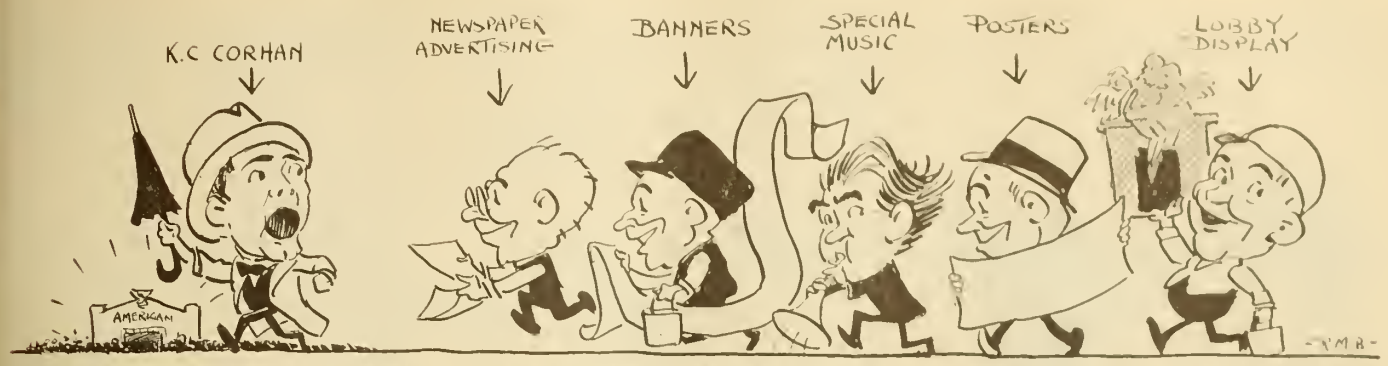
The Moving Picture World

TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY the passing year "Nineteen-Eighteen" has been a strenuous one. Deep in the world war much of our country's resources and energy together with nearly four millions of its men and women—don't forget the women—were directly engaged in war and contributing activities. To this great force striving for the Freedom of the World our industry contributed its rightful share in man and money power. In addition to this and backing up, sustaining the high morale, as it were, of these great forces of democracy our industry contributed vastly of its product and services to the common cause of the World's freedom so violently assailed by the bloodthirsty and treacherous Hun.

But Victory was for the Right. Our reward is Peace for the whole World and the privilege of returning to our vocations without fear of the invader. A new year opens before us and with it the markets of the World eager to receive our product and to extend to us the fellowship to which our valor has entitled us.

Shall we not, then, enter upon this new year, "Nineteen-Nineteen," with a broader vision, a World market for the products of our studios and factories? Is it not a great incentive to better effort and better work?

Then let us go to this new task, remembering always the supreme sacrifice that has been made by many of our fellows who died that we might enjoy that Peace and Liberty which they gave their lives to protect.



CORHAN OF HOPEWELL PACKS 'EM IN

Just to Prove Exchangeman Wrong, Virginia Exhibitor Spends $225 for Two-Day Showing of Feature and $106 for Advertising—Counts Up Profit of $477

Illustrated by Brinkerhoff

SAY, don't these trade paper editorials about spending good money to advertise pictures make you sick?

"If some of those fellows up in New York who write that stuff could come down here to Hopewell, with its twelve thousand people and five theatres, and try out their 'tell-the-exhibitor-how-to-do-it' stuff, they'd quit shouting that tune about us not knowing how to do things."

"Yes," answered Mr. Corhan, manager of the American Theatre, of Hopewell, Virginia, "the exchanges are demanding so darned much money in rentals that we can't make a decent profit. We pay a big price, and if the weather is good and there is no carnival or circus in town and our opposition hasn't got a bigger attraction, we do a little better than break even. The exchanges and producers get it all. Last week I played 'Hearts of the World,' and would have done a good business, only it rained. So bang went my profits of the week before."

K. C. Corhan was militant. And the exhibitor with whom he was talking was just as upset, but Corhan doesn't want the other fellow named.

"He's a sick man now," he explained. "Since I lost my mind and spent $106 advertising 'The Romance of Tarzan' and made $480 profit in two days, after paying the First National in Richmond $225 for the picture, he doesn't speak to me. "

Mr. Corhan does not excuse his own previous attitude toward intensive exhibitor advertising and publicity for pictures.

Sometimes He Gets Investment Back.

"I figured, too," he condemns himself, "that by the time I had paid $100 a day for a two days' run on a feature, and added enough more to cover my posters, slides and a newspaper announcement, with perhaps a thousand heralds, I had spent about all I could afford. Sometimes I got my investment back. On as many other occasions I lost money. I found that the specials I ran gave me just enough profit, on an average, to make up what I lost on some of the regular program features, with just enough left over at the end of the week to serve as a bare excuse to go to the bank."

Recently Corhan got mad. He was going to quit the business. He went home one night after the show and threw himself disgustedly into a chair.

"Gee whiz," he complained to his wife, who had taken a quick peek into a bedroom to be sure that a little dark-haired son-of-his-father had not been awakened by the door slammed noisily as her husband stormed in, "this picture game is bleeding me to a standstill. I can't make any money. The profit this week won't be $100. Look at to-day's receipts. They're not quite $170. And I'm paying $100 a day for this special. By the time I charge off my rent, light, salaries to the operators and ushers, the supply bill from the exchange and my own regular salary, I'll have as much as $15 left. And the salesman told me it was a whale of a production that has played to tremendous business in this territory.

"Gee Whiz! I Can't Make Any Money."

"Didn't the people like it?" queried his wife.

"I'll Prove That You Are Wrong or That I Am."

"Sure; they applauded like the dickens. But I tell you, on these specials I've got to get more patronage. Two full houses lets me out on the day, but if I am to have any profit I've got to fill it three times or more. And none of the pictures will draw that big here. Maybe it's because this is a bum show town. I'm sick of this working and worrying and trying for practically nothing but a living."

"Won't you make up with one of the two program features you have booked for the latter part of the week at $75 a day?" She was searching for a ray of optimistic thought.

"No. The opposition has a big special booked for Friday and Saturday. He'll get all of the extras and many of my regulars. I can't afford to shelve one of my contract pictures and book another special. I'll only play him even money, and be out my regular rental. I'll lose as it is, but not as much as if I tried to compete with a special."

Enter James Anderson.

There was a knock at the door. Mrs. Corhan returned in a moment to announce Lieutenant James Anderson, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange, of Richmond. If anything Anderson is persistent and to the point.

"What have you booked for two weeks from Monday and Tuesday?" he began as an introduction.

"Nothing yet," Corhan responded, firmly determined to tell Anderson what he thought about exchanges generally.

"All right. I'm going to give you 'The Romance of Tarzan.' You played 'Tarzan of The Apes' and did a good business. You would have done twice as much had you advertised."

"There you go," snapped Corhan, "blaming the fact that I didn't make more than a nominal profit on to my lack of advertising. Didn't I spend $25 in newspapers and heralds? You've always got some excuse when a picture doesn't do all you claim for it. What do you want for 'The Romance of Tarzan'? About $150 for two days, I suppose."

"Don't suppose anything. You're wrong before you start," Anderson retorted. He knew more about Corhan than Corhan suspected, and he had come to Hopewell to prove a belief he had about this particular exhibitor. "You're going to book that picture at $112 a day for two days, and spend at lease $50 in advertising. You'll get your money back."

"Say, I haven't made enough on a special in the last two months to pay my rent. Give you $224 for two days and add $50 for advertising? Nope. Good night."

"That $224 doesn't sound good Corhan. We'll make it real money at $225. Never mind the contract to-night. We'll fix that up in the morning. Goodby."

Corhan did a lot of thinking between then and noon the next day. When Anderson called at the American Theatre he found a different exhibitor from the one he had called on the night before.

"Tell you what I'm going to do, Anderson," Corhan began. "I'm going to book that Tarzan sequel and borrow money, if I have to, to advertise it. I'll either prove you are wrong or that I am."

"Fine," the exchangeman rejoined.

Corhan went to work the next week to prove that there was no logic in the subject of exhibitor advertising—so strongly urged in the Moving Picture World. He was going to satisfy himself, finally and for all time, that any special should stand on its own merits, and that people would come to see it if he had some paper in his lobby and an announcement in the local papers. But to be fair, he was going to resort to the opposite extreme—wanton extravagance—to convince himself.

He ordered three big banners, to be painted by a local artist. He had the Richmond exchange send him a press sheet and music cue. He set to work and wrote two big newspaper ads from the copy suggested in the press sheet. He ordered newspaper ads and publicity cuts until his pen ran dry. He bought enough posters to repaper the interior of the house. He took the leader of his orchestra into consultation, and they arranged an amplification of the prepared music cue, and hurried around and bought what music they needed.

Makes Ten-Reel Assault on Lobby.

Then he turned loose his native talents as a window trimmer, with a genius for arrangements which appeal to the eye and then to the reason, and made a ten-reel assault on his lobby. At the center and rear of the lobby he built an artificial cave. Ferns, palms and tree branches were artistically arranged. Inside the imitation stone entrance to the cave he placed the cutout figures of Tarzan and the white girl, taken from one of the three-sheets. Above this, and reaching from one side of the lobby to the other, he stretched a specially painted lightweight canvas, picturing a tropical moon, set in a light blue sky, and with a suggestion of horizon and tropical trees at each side. Behind this he placed colored lights, so that the effect at night was amazingly realistic. To all of this he added the regulation lobby display cards and stock one-sheets, in their respective frames.

One of the three large banners was hung across the street in front of the theatre. The two others were displayed across other thoroughfares, in advantageous parts of the business district.

One of his competitors met him on the Saturday preceding the Monday he opened with "The Romance of Tarzan."

"What are you doing, going crazy?" he was asked. "I saw a big ad you ran in last night's paper. Bet it cost you $25. What? You've got another scheduled for tonight? Well, we'll be glad to get your patronage after you close. Or has one of the local banks decided to spend its surplus on the American? Gee, man, where's your good common sense? What good are those banners going to do you? Everybody in town knows where the American Theatre is. That sort of stuff won't get you any business."

Another competitor called on him at the theatre that night.

Even Competitor Expresses Concern.

"Listen, Corhan," he said. "I'm a competitor, and we've fought each other good and hard, many times. But you've always been on the level. I don't want someone else who might be a tough guy to get the American. Don't pull all this foolish stuff. The rest of us don't do it, and we're getting by and making a little money. You've not done so badly. What's the use of throwing away all this good coin just because trade paper men, press agents and exchange managers tell you you can't make a picture pay unless you spend a lot of dough advertising. That's all bunk and hokum. It's their excuse for a picture when it doesn't go. You'll go broke, sure, if you keep this up."

Corhan walked the business section of Hopewell on Sunday afternoon, studied his banners, referred occasionally to his second big ad in a copy of Saturday's paper he carried in his pocket, and stood off at several different angles to view the lobby which was to be trimmed that night.

Proposes to Learn Value of Advertising.

At midnight he went home. With the exception of one more ad, which was to appear on Monday at a cost of $15, he had invested in "The Romance of Tarzan" $225 for the rental of it, and $90 in promotion material, including his lobby trim. By noon on Monday, adding the $15 for the ad, he would be in just $331, not including the fixed charges for operating the theatre.

"Well," he told his wife, "either I'll be out a lot of money by Tuesday or I will have made a lot. The boost I'm giving this picture is going to pay big or not at all. And I've got some stiff opposition from two of the other houses. We'll find out exactly what advertising is worth to a picture. If it doesn't win for me this is the last time I'll swallow any hokum about it."

"Gosh! It Worked."

"What do you think will be the result?" she asked.

"I don't dare think. I've got my profits for the last three weeks at stake. If I start to think now, when it's too late to do me any good, I'll be awake all night. I'm in for it, so don't let me get the blues before my excuse for them is established."

Corhan went down to the theatre early on Monday morning and completed the work of arranging his lobby display. Then he went uptown on business. Returning, just before the opening hour at 11 o'clock, he saw, from a block distant, a big crowd around the front. Sensing something wrong—Hopewell used to have a small sized vendetti—he ran the remaining distance, pushing his way through the crowd, expecting to see a body lying in the lobby, or something of that kind, he didn't know just what. But the crowds were looking at the imitation cave, at the sky effect above it, and at the lobby photos and posters.

"We're Packing 'Em In," Says Corhan.

"There must be something wrong with the opposition," Corhan told his assistant shortly after the night shows started. "We're packing them in."

Outside the crowds were still surging around the box office, gazing wide-eyed at the really beautiful effect given the lobby display when it was lighted. And they kept buying tickets, at 25 and 35 cents, until the 600 seats were filled, not once, but twice, and then three times.

"What happened?" asked his wife when he reached home just before midnight.

"About $380 worth," he answered. "And say, you should have heard the comments on that lobby display of mine. It's a knockout. We played to capacity all afternoon and evening. The last show tonight fell a little short, but I've cleared enough to pay $225 for the film, $106 for advertising, and my fixed expense for the day. Tomorrow, anything I do over $75 is net profit."

Here his old opinions flocked back in self-defense. "But probably everybody in town that wants to see it came tonight," he added.

There was another crowd around the lobby at the starting hour on Tuesday. And it did not diminish appreciably throughout the day. When Corhan checked up his receipts for the day shortly before 11 o'clock in the evening, he found that the American Theatre had beaten Monday's gate by exactly $48. His total for Tuesday was $428.

Takes in $808 in Two Days.

"I took in $808 in two days," he said. "My film and advertising cost $331. That left me with $477 net profit, because during the balance of the week my receipts on the program releases were enough to more than pay the week's overhead. It's funny, but when I changed the bill the next day, the people patronized the American in greater numbers than had been usual before for a Wednesday show." He paused a moment, thinking. Then he continued: "There's psychology in a big picture properly advertised. Get them started, and the momentum keeps up for a couple of days afterward. I am going to play a repeat on 'The Romance of Tarzan,' for two days more, with much the same lobby display and general advertising."

"What did your competitors say to you after you had finished the two days on the Tarzan film?" he was asked.

"Nothing. I'm satisfied now that advertising, properly done, and in a sufficiently big way to command real attention, is a mighty good investment for any exhibitor. And I've come all the way to New York to tell you about it. You know, a profit of $477 for two days in a six hundred seat house is something for any exhibitor to think about. I'll do it often now, because I think I know the combination that will keep unlocked for me the mysteries of profitable advertising and publicity."

HOW FOX HELPS WITH HIS "BULLETIN"

Editor McCarthy Has Issued a December Number Filled with Attractive Propaganda

THE publicity department of the Fox Film Corporation makes a specialty of its Exhibitors' Bulletin, issued monthly as an aid to exploiting, at retail, the Fox productions. The December issue is typical of those gone before, showing an improvement over its predecessors as has each previous issue.

Charles E. McCarthy is editor of the Fox Bulletin and he has done a particularly good job in turning out the December issue. His "editorial" utterance, starting twenty-six pages of lively text and pictures, gives encouragement to the exhibitor who really wants to take advantage of the armistice. He dedicates his helpfulness "To an Exhibitor at the Dawn of Peace." In these expressions Editor McCarthy extends no end of encouragement.

Cuts and text referring to particularly successful exhibitors of Fox films occupy the early pages of the Bulletin, references to Edgar E. Duncan, manager of the Colonial, Lincoln, Neb.; John Barncord, manager of the Lamar Theatre, Phoenix, and the Opera House, Winslow, Ariz.; S. L. Baxter, manager of the New Isis Theatre, Denver, and L. M. Boas, manager for Marcus Loew of three houses in Fall River, Mass., are "among those present."

"Ye Village Post Office" is the heading of a page of lively patter, fit for programs or newspapers; and "Cut-Backs and Close-Ups," along with "Long Shots of Film Folks" are two more pages devoted to news of Fox features done in snappy paragraphs. Editor McCarthy weakens his case (in this opinion) by an imitation of K. C. B. in praise of Robert Pelter, manager of the Bijou, Mt. Clemens, Mich.—we are getting "fed up" with space killing chatter in imitation of said K. C. B.

"What the Other Fellow Is Doing" is a "stunt" page telling how certain exhibitors have exploited Fox pictures to money-making advantage. "Says His Pocketbook to Your Pocketbook" is a collection of expressions from showmen who have had experience with the Fox brand, and then follow pages devoted to various products of the Fox loom due for immediate distribution.

To finish off the work there is a list of Fox attractions, Fox exchanges and Fox special features in classified form, and last and prettiest—a cut of Louise Lovely, who looks all her name implies. The exhibitor who comes into possession of Fox's Bulletin is going to find some real helps to picture exploitation, ready prepared to the advantage of his box-office. HILL.

Harry Carr, head of the publicity department of the Mack Sennett Studios at Los Angeles, and Sunday editor of the Los Angeles Times, arrived in New York on Monday, December 16, on a special mission for the Sennett interests. If things break right Mr. Carr may have an interesting story to relate.

EXHIBITORS HOLD OLD-TIME BEEFSTEAK

Members of Manhattan Local and Guests Enjoy Get-Together—Schaefer for 100 Per Cent. Body

IT looked auspicious to see so large attendance so representative of the several branches of the motion picture industry at the beefsteak dinner given at Healey's on Wednesday evening, December 11, by the exhibitors of Manhattan local. It seemed like a revival of old-time interest and a general disposition to get together. Ike Hartstall, William Hilkemeier and Billy Hart, who comprised the entertainment committee, deserve credit for the conduct of the affair. John Manheimer, president of the New York league, acted as toastmaster. Peter J. Schaefer, the national president of the exhibitors' association, was the first speaker. He reiterated that he would put his energies and determination into play to reorganize a 100 per cent. exhibitors' organization that would be representative of the exhibitors of the United States.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the State league, gave an outline of the activities of the State organization in preparing for legislation to be introduced in New York legislature as affecting the exhibitors. Everything is safeguarded and provided for.

Sam Trigger said he was about to return to the exhibitors' fold and lend his attention to their interests. He had been inactive for the past year on account of his two sons being with the army, but now that they had returned he would again take up where he had left off.

Alfred S. Black, of Maine, spoke of his interest in national legislation and said he and Pete Schaefer would go to Washington that night in an effort to secure a modification of taxation.

S. J. Kaufman, of the New York Globe, caused some stir in his remarks by saying he believed too many pretty boys and ingenues were being exploited by directors. Most stories picturized a couple of silly idiots in the travails of love. There were few big ideals for the picturization of truth and mentioned several present day and other subjects that would make us realize truth and would work for the betterment of mankind.

Other speakers were Rudolph Sanders, P. A. Powers, Harry Reichenbach, W. L. Sherrill and I. E. Chadwick.

Among those present were Henry E. Friedman, A. Alphonse Frank, Bert Sanford, Harry L. Lyons, Harry Rapf, M. Oestriker, M. Buckland Returns with Fresh Ideas.

After several weeks spent in the eastern metropolis, Wilfred Buckland, art director, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to Hollywood, with new enthusiasm and new ideas.

As art director Mr. Buckland has upon his shoulders the responsibility of arranging the plans for innumerable artistic settings. He had been on the coast for a number of years, however, and felt the necessity of getting into closer touch with the progressive methods of the big city.

"The importance of perfect investiture is clearly becoming more apparent, and in fact it may be said that it is imperative that the setting for pictures shall be absolutely in accord with the most modern ideas of art and beauty as well as utility," said Mr. Buckland.

Herbert Brenon Back from England.

Herbert Brenon, who has been in England for the past eight months, has returned to America. Mr. Brenon left this country in response to a call from the English Government to make a British propaganda picture. Under the auspices of the Minister of Information, Lord Beaverbrook, Mr. Brenon has been engaged on its production ever since. He is in the best of health and spirits.

Mr. Brenon did not bring his production with him, but expects it will be shown in London within the next few weeks.

SUNDAY CLOSING QUESTION LOOMS

Exhibitors in New Jersey and Ohio Meet to Discuss Preventive Measures—Ministerial Associations in Indiana Are Making Determined Fight, and Movement Is Spreading

SUNDAY closing for motion picture theatres is breaking out strongly in various sections of the country where the open Sunday prevails. Ministerial associations are meeting and adopting resolutions requesting city authorities to close the theatres. Bills are being framed for presentation at forthcoming sessions of state legislatures, so that there is promise of lively times for exhibitors.

Jersey exhibitors have been holding meetings preparatory to offering a bill in their state legislature asking relief, and the exhibitors of Ohio have shown considerable activity along similar lines.

Ohio exhibitors, in particular, are awakening to the prospects of Sunday shows being eliminated, while in Boston the ministers are busy.

Dayton Exhibitors Meet to Discuss Sunday Closing

HARRY W. KRESS, campaign manager of the Ohio State Screen League, with offices in Piqua, sent out notices from his office on December 7 that a meeting of the Dayton exhibitors would be called Friday, December 13, to arrange to get together in order that a united stand could be taken by the state organization to fight the Sunday closing law that is in effect in Ohio. A good representation was present at the rooms of the Miami Valley Exhibitors League in Dayton. The meeting was called to order by Gus Muller, manager of the Select Exchange at Cincinnati, who has obtained a temporary leave of absence from that company to act as traveling representative of the Ohio State Screen League. The object of the meeting was explained to the managers present by Mr. Muller and Harry Kress that if action was not taken soon, instead of having over one hundred towns already closed in Ohio, every town would be closed, which would embrace all of the big cities such as Cincinnati, Dayton, Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo, Youngstown, Akron, and many others.

Mr. Kress said that Piqua, Ohio, his own town, was now closed and that he controls three theatres there, including one legitimate house. Mr. Kress had devoted a lot of his time to the matter and was instrumental in organizing the league. The other officers of the league are H. H. Lustig, of Cleveland, president; Fred Desberg, Cleveland, secretary and treasurer.

Gus Sun of Springfield, Ohio, who was in attendance at Dayton and who controls about thirty theatres throughout the state, mostly vaudeville, expressed the desire to co-operate with the picture interests and consented to leaving out any mention of legalizing the legitimate performance on Sunday with the understanding that if the first bill was passed an attempt would be made to permit vaudeville and other speaking attractions. Without a single exception all of the Dayton managers at the meeting promised financial aid to the Ohio State Screen League in the fight to put over a law that would set things right.

Jerseymen Take Action to Further Sunday Opening

A MEETING of the New Jersey Exhibitors' League was held at 1758 Broadway, New York, on Thursday morning, December 12. Dr. Charles Hespe, the president, was in the chair. The subject of discussion was the method of procedure necessary to accomplish legislation for a local option bill for Sunday opening in the New Jersey legislature this winter.

Sunday opening is a moot question in Jersey. It is largely indorsed in cities of the first and second class, but in residential and rural communities it is an open and divided question. A committee of six was appointed with power to act in formulating a plan whereby the desired result might be accomplished. The members of the committee are James J. Lyons of Morristown; Charles L. Dooley of Patterson, Louis Rosenthal of Passaic; Joseph Stearn of Newark; George Jacobs of Newark, and Dr. Hespe of Jersey City.

Among those present were Peter J. Schaefer, Charles Hespe, Harry K. Hackett, Passaic; Joe Stearn, Newark; David Keizerstein, Bayonne; George P. Williamson, Jersey City; Louis J. Ruckle, Dumont; William O. Maschke, Ridgefield Park; James J. Lyons, Morristown; F. C. Cross, Long Branch; H. S. Jans, Newark; B. L. Shafer, New Brunswick; Sig. Marok, Newark; B. W. Suydans, New Brunswick; Walter M. Hoffman, Orange; D. Shepherd, Orange; E. U. Cadugan, Jersey City; Barnett Albin, Madison; Michaelson & Baer, North Bergen; Aaron Shintleman, New Brunswick; George Gold, Paterson; S. M. Aughinsbaugh, Jersey City; P. A. Adams, Paterson; M. L. Fleishman, Newark; Louis Rosenthal, Passaic; Edmund A. Thomaser, Rutherford and Carlstadt; L. F. Blumenthal, Jersey City; H. F. Jans, Metro Film, New Jersey; Martin Singeo, Newark; F. C. Cross, Long Branch; Charles L. Dooley, Paterson; George Jacobs, Newark; Alfred Black, Maine.

Sunday Closing Wanted by Indianapolis Ministers

A COMMITTEE of Indianapolis ministers, representing the Indianapolis Ministerial Association, which recently began a drive to close the motion picture theatres and other places of amusement on Sundays, conferred recently with Mayor Charles W. Jewett in regard to the situation, but received very little satisfaction.

Mayor Jewett said he told the committee that he would make no announcement regarding his policy until after he has conferred with the motion picture men. The ministers' committee presented a set of resolutions to the mayor in which they demand that he begin an immediate enforcement of the Sunday closing laws.

It is understood some of the ministers present at the meeting were not in sympathy with the resolutions, a number of them contending that the legal way is not the proper way to handle the situation. Some of them said that before the ministers try to keep the people away from Sunday shows they should prevail on some of the members of their own organization to remain away from such places.

It is the belief of the motion picture interests that Mayor Jewett will not accede to the ministers' demands.

Sunday Closing Agitation Is Spreading.

Following closely on the heels of the action taken by the members of the Indianapolis Ministerial Association, in their proposed fight against the operation of motion picture shows and other forms of amusement on Sunday, the ministers of Clinton, Ind., have announced that they, too, will endeavor to see that the motion picture theatres there remain closed on the Sabbath.

The Clinton ministers have adopted the same resolutions passed by the Indianopolis association, and are going to prevail on the town authorities to get busy and enforce the statutes regarding Sunday amusements. The Clinton exhibitors, however, are not losing any sleep over the matter for they feel that sentiment in regard to the question is about "fifty-fifty."

The exhibitors say that if any effort is made to interfere with them in the operation of their shows they will consent to arrest and have the case settled by a jury. With the town about equally divided on the question they feel that it would be a difficult task for the prosecutor to get a jury of twelve men to convict them. Ministers in some of the other towns and cities in the state are understood to be considering similar moves.

Protests Sunday Concerts at Dorchester's Strand

THE mayor of Boston, Andrew J. Peters, has under consideration the protest of churches in the vicinity of Upham's Corner, Dorchester, a high-class residential section of the Hub, against Sunday night concerts being run at the new $1,000,000 Upham's Corner Strand Theatre, operated by the Nathan Gordon interests.

A lively hearing took place in the City Council Chamber when representatives from the churches appeared in opposition to the theatre's Sunday night concerts. No protest was made against the weekly shows, which were highly praised. The basis of the protest was upon the fact that the theatre drew largely from the regular attendants of the churches.

The Rev. Edward E. Gaylord of Pilgrim Congregational church handled the case for the protestants. Four churches are within a short radius of the theatre, Dr. Gaylord said, and it tends to attract the younger element particularly away from the church services.

Manager J. J. McGuiness of the theatre said the Catholics and Jews did not object to the Sunday night concerts and he didn't see why others should.

KANSAS CITY HAS NEW ORGANIZATION

Association Comprised of Representatives of the Picture Industry and Speaking Stage Launched

THE new organization of amusement enterprises in Kansas City was formally launched December 3. It will include speaking stage, vaudeville, moving picture—exchange and exhibitor—and supply representation, and probably will follow somewhat the lines of the Chicago association.

J. E. Storey, manager of the Pathe Exchange at Kansas City, was chosen president; E. W. Werner, proprietor of the Warwick Theatre, vice-president; and George W. Curtis, proprietor of the Doric, treasurer. Mr. Storey has a wide acquaintance among Kansas City business men, both socially and in business organizations, and he is setting up high and sternly practical ideals for the operation of the association. Mr. Werner is operating one of the best of the suburban moving picture shows. Mr. Curtis has lived most of his life in Kansas City, and knows the town thoroughly—and he is full of energy and fight. Mr. Curtis got busy at the organization meeting, securing the five dollars initiation fee of thirty-seven first members, from all branches of the amusement industry.

To Aid Each Branch of the Industry.

"We will steer clear of petty quarrels, personal matters and subjects that concern only the minor details of single constituent branches of the industry," said Mr. Storey. "The organization must start right, with strong purpose, a desire and a willingness to do big things, to co-operate right down the line. And that's the way we are starting—we hope that we can give real help to each branch of the industry in its own problems, each getting the backing of the entire organization when such backing is needed; and that our occasional meetings and the constructive work we can do in the industry for the town will enhance the standing of each factor in the association, not only among business men, but before the public—and among ourselves. We will be to the amusement business what the Chamber of Commerce usually is to all business in a community—the central body having representation from all, with departments, committees, divisions which study their own problems, assisted by the facilities of the Chamber, and helped by the Chamber's force and large membership in putting over projects of particular interest to any one."

Advantages of New Body.

Richard Robertson, Goldwyn manager at Kansas City, mentioned at the organization meeting, two distinct points of advantage to be gained by the new association.

"First," said Mr. Robertson, "there will be one representative always on the job looking out for our interests, appearing in public and before officials, backed by the strength of the entire organization.

"Second—and this appeals to me as if tremendous importance to the entire industry—we can, with such an organization, immediately take our place as representatives of the world's fifth largest industry. We will have distinguished speakers at our meetings, whose words will be of general interest to the public. We will have local ministers and business men, talk to us and bring to us the contact with other phases of business and education life. Our organization will soon become as much of an institution as the Chamber of Commerce, the Merchant's Association, the Real Estate Board, and the other groups, whose meetings are matters of public interest, and whose officers are looked to for comments on matters of public concern regarding which their industries or organizations have special facilities for information or advice. We can become the real factor in the city's life that we should be. Perhaps I should say that we will be recognized as the factors our industry puts us in position to be. There is a wonderful future of service, aside from the purveying of pictures and of theatrical entertainment, before the amusement industry, through this organization."

William Farnum Signs Long Time Fox Contract

MAKING him what is claimed to be the highest-salaried male dramatic star in the film profession, William Farnum has signed a contract for a period of years with William Fox.

William Farnum.

Following the execution of the agreement William Fox issued a statement in which he said:

"This announcement will set at rest all rumors being circulated throughout the country that William Farnum intended leaving Fox Film Corporation. It is true that he was approached by nearly every producing organization in the field, but he decided to renew his old associations.

"William Farnum's salary is only commensurate with his wonderful popularity and drawing power at the box office. This new contract places William Farnum in a class by himself. It makes him the highest paid male dramatic artist in the picture world today."

Plans are said to be already under way for several big special attractions featuring Farnum. The Fox organization is negotiating with a number of America's foremost authors for books and stories which will have dramatic power and will afford a magnitude of production commensurate with Mr. Farnum's abilities. These stories will be announced in the near future, it is stated, and will be an indication of the importance of the productions in which Mr. Farnum will appear during the coming year.

Mr. Farnum will continue to be a star in the William Fox Standard Picture group, it is understood, as it has been Mr. Fox's policy that only the best stars and the best stories be released under this brand.

The signing of the new contract comes at the close of the most successful year in Mr. Farnum's career. "Les Miserables," "True Blue," "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," four Farnum releases this fall, have scored tremendous successes.

Coming Farnum releases, "For Freedom" and "The Man Hunter," will be released within the next few weeks.

Hollywood Directs Arden Subject.

Edwin L. Hollywood's introduction to the moving picture was as an actor with Vitagraph. James Young was at that time a director with the same company. Hollywood and Young were friends from the days when Young starred in "Brown of Harvard" and Hollywood was a lesser member of the cast. Pretty soon young Hollywood became Young's right hand man in the direction of Vitagraph pictures. After seven years at that studio in Flatbush, Hollywood accompanied Young to World. When Young went to California, the other went along.

For two years at the Lasky Western studio Hollywood was associated with Young. After that he directed independently several subjects. His latest picture is "The Challenge Accepted," starring Zena Keefe. It is a production for Arden Photoplays, Inc., of which Mr. Hollywood is a partner, and is being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through the exchanges of Pathe.

Changes in Famous Players Forces.

S. R. Kent, formerly associated with Hiram Adrams in the administrative bureau at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and more recently branch manager at Kansas City, has been made special representative to exchanges.

Fred C. Creswell, formerly sales manager at the Chicago office, also becomes special representative to exchanges.

W. R. Scates, who before becoming associated with the Famous Players, was manager for General Film at St. Louis and Milwaukee and handled "The Crisis" in Middle Western territory and has recently been dividing the responsibilities of the Chicago branch with Mr. Creswell, now assumes full charge of the office.

Austin to Play with Chaplin.

Albert Austin, who appeared with Charlie Chaplin as a member of the Fred Karno company during its tour of England, France and America, has been put under contract by the comedian to play leads in future First National releases, and to assist him in production.

Mr. Austin left the varieties stage for motion pictures when Mr. Chaplin was producing for Mutual Film Corporation, and has continued to work with him up to the time the contract was signed with First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

SCOURGE REVIVING IN MANY STATES

Recrudescence of Influenza Epidemic Reported from Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Virginia, the Carolinas and Other Sections—Ban Restored in Many Cities

ACCORDING to report received by the Moving Picture World from it correspondents the epidemic of influenza which was apparently on the wane a week or two ago has broken out afresh in a number of states. There is a decided recrudesence of the plague in Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, Missouri, Washington, D. C., Michigan, in the Northwest and in a number of the southern states. Many of the cities in Arkansas and Oklahoma are closing again, and the first big city to close for the second time in Texas is San Antonio. Portland, Ore., which has been open for but three weeks, is in danger of having the ban restored.

Washington City exhibitors are again threatened with a ban on shows, and theatres in many of the cities of the Carolinas and Virginia, where the malady on its second visitation is assuming rather alarming proportions, are again in the throes of a second closing.

In some Ohio and Kentucky cities a return of the epidemic is not so serious as is a prohibition directed against the attendance of children at theatres.

The closing ban again has been placed on most all of the towns of Montana. Michigan is experiencing so severe a return visitation that the authorities have threatened several times to impose a second quarantine.

In Iowa and in the San Francisco territory conditions are improving, while in Salt Lake City, where theatres have been dark for nearly nine weeks, the influenza quarantine was removed.

Reports Show the South in Throes of a Recurrence

THAT the South is in the throes of a recurrence of the influenza epidemic of alarming proportions is evidenced by last minute reports coming in from the states of North and South Carolina and Virginia. Many towns in this territory have again been closed and health authorities are daily expected to close many others of the principal towns in the three states named. Theatres are said to be just emerging from the crisis brought on by the former closed period and business just assuming normal proportions, and the prospect of another closing order, especially through the holiday period, is indeed alarming and may cause financial embarrassment to the management of many of the theatres in that territory. A review of the towns reported as already closed reveals, however, the fact that those towns were hit less heavily by the former epidemic, suffering only short shutdowns, and in the cities where the former plague visited more heavily, no recurrence is yet in evidence.

Condensed reports from the Southern territory gathered by the Moving Picture World correspondent follows:

Raleigh, N. C.—Charles W. Stiles, in charge of United States Public Health work with supervision over the entire state during the recent influenza epidemic has called a meeting of the leading health forces and his official staff to meet at once for a review of the condition brought about by a recurrence of the epidemic in many of the principal cities of the state. Reports of the closing of a number of towns have already been received at state headquarters and Dr. Stiles is of the opinion that a serious visitation of the plague again is possible over the entire State since the percentage of cases before was small in congested districts in proportion to the total population, and it is assumed that very few individuals are immune from the disease.

Expect Closing Daily.

Locally the situation is again assuming alarming proportions and an order closing all places of public gathering is expected daily. The State Board of Health has issued a circular for posting throughout the State which is playing havoc with theatre attendance where it has been circulated, the circular paying special emphasis upon motion picture theatres as spreaders of influenza, and which has brought about a protest from various managers who feel that it is working an injustice upon their business.

Wilson Closes Again.

Wilson, N. C.—Theatres, churches, and all places of public assembly were closed by order of the health authorities on December 10 following the discovery of a recurrence of the influenza epidemic which caused a former closed period of three weeks in October. Opening will not likely occur before the middle of January.

Rocky Mount, N. C.—All theatres, churches, etc., were closed here on December 12, following a survey of the influenza, has at last developed a good fact that one hundred and fifty new cases had been discovered within the past forty-eight hours.

Asheville, N. C.—This city, which escaped lightly in the first epidemic of influenza, has at last developed a good epidemic, and authorities claim that it will be necessary to close theatres, churches, etc., unless the next few days show a rapid improvement in the visitation. Theatre managers are expecting hourly a closing order.

Charlotte, N. C.—Another visitation of the dreaded influenza plague has been experienced here and while no action toward closing the theatres has yet been taken, such is in prospect within the next few days unless rapid improvement is shown by later reports. Camp Greene has already been quarantined against the city.

Several Towns Closed.

Columbia, S. C.—Spanish influenza is again assuming alarming proportions throughout the state, and several of the principal towns have been closed. Columbia has not yet noticed a recurrence of the malady and it is not likely that statewide action will be taken by the health authorities as was done previously. However, reports coming in to state headquarters are to the effect that several towns, including Florence, Spartanburg and Greenville have been closed by the local authorities and will likely not reopen before the middle of January if at that time.

Roanoke, Va.—All motion picture and other theatres were closed here on December 9 due to the appearance of Spanish influenza in large numbers of cases. It is reported that Norfolk and Petersburg are also on the verge of closing again.

Majority of Theatres Shut in Kansas City District

MORE than 75 per cent. of the moving picture theatres are closed in Kansas City territory. For every show that opens—and one does occasionally open in a town where the epidemic recedes—a dozen are closed.

There is a possibility that many of these theatres will not reopen until after the holidays. It will be several weeks before any general reopening takes place.

Conditions affecting moving picture exhibitors are almost as bad now as when the epidemic was at its worst several weeks ago. At that time practically 100 per cent. of the theatres were closed—including the theatres in the larger cities. The bans were removed from many towns. The reopening in November in Kansas City assisted largely in raising the total of running houses at that time to about 60 per cent. of the theatres of the territory. But since the first of December the closing orders have fallen thick and fast in Central and Western Kansas, and in Western Missouri.

In some towns where theatres are allowed to run the restrictions are so onerous that the exhibitors might as well shut up shop—and many of them are closing. For instance, in Kansas City, Kansas, children under 16 years of age may not visit a picture show. In Wichita and other cities no more than one person is admitted for each 100 square feet of floor space.

A Suit in Wichita.

At Wichita, the churches, schools and moving picture houses co-operated to resist an order closing them because the board of health did not at the same time close the stores—referred to as prolific means of spreading of contagion, if the contagion is mostly spread that way. Judge R. E. Bird of the district court of Sedgwick county granted a restraining order against the city of Wichita and its health officers on the ground of discrimination. But the health board continued to enforce the orders—and naturally the preachers and exhibitors did not care to go too strong in violation.

The health board and city officials did the worrying. They applied to the supreme court of Kansas for a writ of mandamus against Judge Bird to cause him to erase the restraining order. The supreme court did not issue the writ, but advised the city officials of Wichita to bring an appeal from the Sedgwick county court's decision issuing the order. The assistant attorney general of the state assisted the attorneys of Wichita and of the Wichita board of health in the hearing before the Supreme Court. It is understood that the Wichita officials are about to comply with the restraining order, but with restrictions that amount to closure—prohibiting more than one person for every 100 square feet of floor space.

Ban Removed from Sale Lake City Theatres

AFTER having remalned dark for nearly nine weeks on account of the influenza quarantine, a majority of the Salt Lake City theatres reopened Monday, December 9. The ban on theatres was lifted as suddenly as it was imposed, the announcement being made by the state board of health but three days before the playhouses were reopened.

Capacity houses were reported by every manager.

The action of the state and city boards of health in raising the quarantine on theatres and churches followed shortly on the heels of a protest lodged with Dr. T. B. Beatty, state health commissioner, by the theatre and film men of the city. Meeting in the office of the manager of Pantages Theatre, the several theatrical managers and film exchange managers adopted a set of resolutions, vigorously protesting against alleged discrimination in favor of department stores, which were being allowed to operate as usual. It was also complained that the street car company, stores and other places were not obeying existing regulations aimed to prevent crowding.

Committees were appointed to take the matter up with the state board of health and the city department of public safety to ascertain why the regulations were not being lived up to by the interests complained of. The theatre managers demanded that either they be allowed to open or other places be closed within reason. They explained that they did not wish to place themselves in favor of any action which would tend to spread the disease, but did contend that it was time for discrimination against the place of amusement to stop since many were being called upon a bear a burden which threatened the very life of their business.

Result of Action of Film Men.

The direct result of the action of the theatre and film men was the promulgation by the state board of health of a set of much more stringent rules, which are yet in effect save those which forbid the operation of theatres and services in churches.

The question of compelling theatres to admit only 50 per cent. of their capacity for a time is under consideration, but no action has been taken. In the meantime the houses are packed for every performance. Unless there is a serious relapse in the influenza situation traceable to the reopening of theatres, it is understood that no more rules will be made concerning places of amusement.

Indiana Exhibitors Protest Against Ban Extension

IF THE ban on public gatherings at Gary, Ind., is not lifted by December 21 there no doubt will be "something doing" on the part of the Gary motion picture exhibitors and theatre managers. The theatres in Gary have been closed the greater part of the time during the last eight or ten weeks because of different outbreaks of influenza and pneumonia, and there was some talk last week that the ban, which has been in effect—for the third time—about two weeks, may be extended again.

A meeting of all the exhibitors and theatre managers of the city was held earlier in the week at the Orpheum Theatre to discuss the attitude to be taken by the theatre managers regarding a continuation of the ban. It was the consensus of the meeting that the theatre men had been discriminated against, because the stores and other places had not been forced to close.

As a result the following public protest was drafted:

The theatres of Gary have been closed by the health authorities of the city under the impression that the theatres here were breeding places for germs of influenza.

We believe that the Board of Health of Gary has been acting in good faith, but we do not believe that, after two months' trial, they should continue to dictate a policy that is apparently accomplishing very little toward checking the disease.

The crowded street cars, stores packed with Christmas shoppers, theatre parties going to Hammond and Chicago and returning on crowded trains and cars, and with no effort being made to curb these conditions, it would appear that the theatres of Gary have been unjustly discriminated against.

We believe it to be the will of the people that the local theatres should open again. It is the most natural thing on earth that a working public should feel the need of and demand amusement. It is likewise most natural that, if the public cannot obtain good, clean amusement at its doorstep, it will seek amusement and relaxation elsewhere.

Amusement in Gary depends upon local patronage and so cannot offer anything but the most sanitary and comfortable houses—while outside amusement places do not have to depend upon Gary and can be conducted on any basis to secure the profits.

Every amusement house in Gary has been fumigated and made thoroughly sanitary—some of them by repeated processes—thus insuring the public against danger.

We believe the majority of the public of Gary is with us in saying that the present discrimination against the theatres in keeping them closed is not accomplishing the good that a closing order is intended to accomplish, and for that reason we believe the theatres should be allowed to open.

Theatre Men Start Campaign.

The theatre men are now engaged in a campaign to crystalize sentiment in favor of permitting them to go ahead with their business and it has been intimated, in case the ban is extended, they may open their doors and make a test case of the closing order, as was done recently by the theatre men in Terre Haute.

The theatre owners argue that it is not more dangerous for them to operate than it is for stores to permit crowds to congregate at the counters, and they say they are willing to observe any restrictions placed upon them that other business houses must suffer.

Scourge Increasing in Michigan.

The influenza epidemic apparently is on the increase in Michigan and Governor A. E. Sleeper and Dr. R. M. Olin have threatened several times to again put the ban on public gatherings, churches, theatres, etc. Charles H. Seaman, of the Consolidated Theatres, Inc., Detroit, prevailed upon the governor and Dr. Olin to permit an educational campaign to be waged for another week or so by the theatres, and in the belief that this will produce results, they consented to let the theatres remain open.

Kalamazoo has been ordered closed and there are still many places throughout the state that the local boards of health will not permit to operate. Detroit and Grand Rapids are in splendid shape, with fewer cases of influenza than any time during the epidemic.

Many Northwest Cities Restore Influenza Ban

THE recurrence of the Spanish influenza epidemic in the Northwest is playing havoc with the motion picture business again in most parts of the territory. The closing ban has again been placed upon practically all of the towns of Montana, the cities of Butte, Billings, Missoula being among the first. Some of the towns of Oregon have never been opened since first closing several weeks ago, and Portland, which has been open for about three weeks, is in danger of having the lid clamped on again.

Theatre managers in Seattle met the city health commissioner and the mayor when the epidemic began to spread again, and advised them to have the cases quarantined, instead of closing theatres and schools and limiting business in the downtown stores, as they did in the first period of the epidemic. The officials were so much criticized for their former drastic measures that they were quite willing to listen to the argument put up by the theatre men and agreed to quarantine cases in their own homes, if the disease continued to spread.

In the meantime people are not staying away from the theatres in Seattle, for all managers report splendid business. This is not the case in other towns of the state, however, where the epidemic is making its second appearance. In most of these the people, who are for the most part regular patrons of the shows, are staying at home, and the picture theatres have not the advantage of the transient population of the large cities, which insists on being entertained.

Spokane Theatres Under Modified Influenza Ban

THE influenza ban has again been placed on amusements in Spokane, prohibiting all dancing, private and public, but permits the theatres to operate under a limited quarantine provision. This provides that all theatres shall use only every alternate row of seats to avoid congestion and that they shall have no shows between 5 and 6:30 p. m., giving time for complete ventilation and reheating and cleaning the theatres.

Moving picture managers, deprived of a large part of their normal revenues by the modified quarantine which permits seating to half capacity only, are casting about for economies to offset the enforced loss of revenues. The present service will be kept up in every instance and the patrons will not be affected by any changes found necessary.

Exchanges Reduce Rentals.

The exchanges generally have made a voluntarily reduction of 33 1-3 per cent. in the service charges for Spokane. This action on the part of the exchanges is due to their belief that a revenue two-thirds of normal is better than no revenue, which might be the case if the managers found it impossible to curtail expenses.

May Cut Operators' Salaries.

Some of the picture managers are talking of a cut in operators' salaries while the quarantine is on. This applies mainly to the operators who are the best paid employes, outside, possibly, of a few organists. As yet nothing definite has been done on the matter as the move probably would have to be voluntary on the part of the operators.

Discuss Lincense Fee Reduction.

Theatre managers generally are discussing the question of asking the city council to release them from the city charges for the length of time the quarantine is on. Each manager pays an annual license to the city based on his seating capacity. For the larger houses it runs from $200 to $300 a year. All licenses expire January 1. If the quarantine continues three months, including the seven weeks the houses were closed entirely, the managers will ask for a cut of 25 per cent. in the annual license fee.

Another General Ban Feared by Southwest Film Men

THE influenza situation which had been satisfactory for several weeks does not look so promising in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas during the second week in December and exhibitors and film men are apprehensive as to another general closing.

From small towns in central Arkansas and eastern Oklahoma, the disease gives promise of spreading once more. Fortunately, so doctors observe, the epidemic in its renewed form does not seem to be attended by nearly as many fatalities as in the initial outbreak.

Statistics obtainable from Dallas film exchange managers under date of December 9 show that thirty-six towns and cities in the three states have closed their theatres once more; twenty theatres did not reopen after the first closing. The largest town to close for a second time is San Antonio, Texas. Pine Bluff, Ark.; Amarillo, Texas, Hugo, Medill, Alvah, and El Reno, Okla., are among those closing.

In Dallas the general opinion is that the theatres alone should not be made to bear the brunt of the closing. Exhibitors have pointed out to the authorities that should it be deemed necessary for them to close they will gladly do so but declare that the closing of the city should be complete. They advocate the closing of department stores during the Christmas rush of shopping, the closing of churches, schools and abandonment of all public meetings.

It is likely that if any closing order goes into effect here the theatres will not be the only ones to suffer.

Kansas City Puts Ban on Children.

"Children under 16 years of age shall not be admitted to any picture show."

This was the order promulgated in Kansas City, Kansas, the week of December 1, upon the reappearance of the influenza in that city. This order did not come from the board of health, however. It was the solution proposed by the Chamber of Commerce. And while possibly the exhibitors could easily have resisted enforcement of the suggestion, they followed it. The curtailment of business was severe. Because the order seemed so clearly discriminatory there was a disposition on the part of exhibitors to test its validity, and to bring to a direct issue the advantage of such a restriction by suit. It is likely that a test case may be made if the influenza continues and the restriction is not removed.

Authorities Bar Children From Cincinnati Theatres

THE recurrence of the epidemic of influenza is the outstanding factor in Cincinnati moving picture circles just now, as it is of most other businesses, except that the prohibition against children attending the theatres is perhaps hurting the exhibitors more than the inability of children to ride on street cars at present hurts other business men. The situation has not improved much up to this writing, and while the Board of Health, at its most recent meeting for the purpose of considering whether a complete shutdown was necessary, did not see fit to take that step, it was plainly indicated that if the epidemic continued to grow worse more drastic closing orders than those in effect in October and early November would certainly be issued.

Health Boards Clash.

Across the river in the Kentucky towns there has been a general disposition on the part of the local health authorities to close the theatres to the same extent, and in Dayton, Bellevue, Newport, Covington and Ludlow orders were issued by the city and town boards directing the closing of the moving picture houses to children under 16 years of age. However, a clash arose between the local Kentucky boards and the state board, due to the alleged failure of the state board to enforce in Covington its own order that moving picture theatres be closed. As the other Kentucky towns across the river obeyed the order and the theatres closed, the resulting confusion may be imagined. At present Covington and Newport theatres are open to all except children under 16, as in Cincinnati, and the same is true of the other towns across the river.

May Place Ban Against Los Angeles Visitors

WHILE the influenza epidemic in the San Francisco territory is gradually subsiding, moving picture theatres are not being reopened as rapidly as was expected. In some places houses were reopened only to be closed again, and it is doubtful if the new year finds all in operation. Of a total of three hundred and fifty theatres served by San Francisco film exchanges, but about two hundred were open at the end of the first week in December, with about one hundred and twenty of these located within the confines of the Greater San Francisco. Business has been resumed in most of the large towns in this territory, the theatres that remain closed being small ones for the most part.

New cases of influenza are commencing to appear in San Francisco Bay communities, and the wearing of gauze masks has been resumed by the faculty and students of the University of California at Berkeley. In almost every instance these cases have been traced to recent arrivals from Southern California and city councils of Berkeley and Oakland are considering placing a quarantine against visitors from Los Angeles. Theatre owners having houses in the Northwest have been compelled to close again in a number of places.

San Francisco exhibitors are doing a steadily increasing volume of business and downtown houses are about back to normal again.

Scourge Again Threatens Ban on District Theatres

THE continued prevalence of Spanish influenza in the District of Columbia again threatens to cause the closing of the theatres there. The daily increases in the number of cases has alarmed the authorities and it is stated that a continuance of this condition will result in the closing of schools, churches, theatres and other places of amusement. The low mortality rate that has prevailed so far in the threatened recurrence of the epidemic is the only encouraging feature of the situation.

The theatre owners are only just beginning to recover from the effects of the last closing order and it is feared that serious financial losses will be incurred if they are again prohibited from doing business. All of Washington's theatres are sanitary and up-to-date in every particular.

It is not likely that the film men will enter any protest, because they would not care to appear to be standing in the way of better health conditions, but they do hope that the Commissioners will think well before putting another closing order into execution.

Authorities May Restore Influenza Ban in Cleveland

INFLUENZA conditions in Cleveland and northern Ohio assumed alarming proportions during the week ending December 15, and the health commissioner of Cleveland announced that he may impose the closing restrictions again providing the number of daily cases continued to increase.

Incidently, when this was made known, the exhibitors' league, exchange men's Chamber of Commerce organization, and officials of the operators, musicians' and stage hands' unions announced that they would put up a vigorous fight against the restrictions unless all stores and other places where people assemble are treated like the theatres. They were not against the closing order, but took the stand that the recent closing for four weeks of theatres, churches and schools was a joke and did not stamp out the epidemic.

Reports from northern Ohio were not good. On Saturday, December 14, about seventy-five towns in that section were closed.

In Warren, Ohio, the theatre managers had a meeting on Friday, December 13, and put it up to city officials to close everything up tight or allow the theatres to reopen. The officials allowed the theatres to reopen the following Sunday.

In Canton, Ohio, the influenza ban was lifted December 2, but children under sixteen years were not admitted.

TWO ZUKOR MEN START NEW COMPANY

Hiram Abrams and Ben Schulberg Resign from Famous Players-Lasky Administrative Bureau

HIRAM ABRAMS, vice president and managing director, and B. P. Schulberg, vice managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, have resigned their offices to form their own organization and carry out certain plans which it has long been their desire to establish. The news has aroused surprise and interest in the trade, for these two men have long been known as strong pillars of the organization with which they have been identified since its inception.

In response to a request for a statement as to what general form his plans would take, Mr. Abrams remarked that they were of too much import to the trade to be presented in their present immature shape, but that they would be announced in detail within a few weeks when they would be found to comprise some of the most constructive measures and some of the most equitable principles ever offered for the trade's consideration. He also added that the reason for his departure from his old company was due to the realization that it is more difficult to work out new tenets of procedure between two factors of an industry through an old company with established policies than through a new and unhampered machinery of his own construction.

Mr. Abrams is to start for Los Angeles immediately, and it is promised that the announcement will promptly follow his return to New York. In his absence, Mr. Schulberg will remain in New York adopting the preliminary steps toward the organization which they contemplate building.

They are in close touch with motion picture conditions throughout the country, and their plan to organize a new unit in the industry indicates that they believe that the after-war influence promises expansion for the entire motion picture business.

Organize Administrative Bureau.

Messrs. Abrams and Schulberg about a year ago surrendered the presidency and general managership respectively of Paramount to organize the administrative bureau of the corporation, through which, as was announced at that time, it was their desire to bring the exhibitors of the country closer to the producers for their common welfare, so that a direct channel of communication could be maintained between studio and theatre. In the interests of this project they made numerous tours of the country, in order to come in more direct contact with trade currents. It was as a result of these observations that they prompted the declaration by Jesse L. Lasky that the company would produce no gruesome, religious, costume plays or fairy-tales during the war, and they were also responsible for the system at present in vogue of obtaining opinions on all productions from exhibitors.

Hiram Abrams entered the film business in the early stages of its development, when his force and devotion to the exhibitors' interests rapidly made him conspicuous as one of the foremost distributors in the country. He has always been known as a constructive organizer and a vigorous exponent of equitable principles between producer and exhibitor. He was among the first exchange men to acquire the rights to first features produced by the Famous Players Film Company, of which he, in association with Walter E. Greene, was the sole distributor in New England. He was one of the principal factors in Film Company at its inception as scenario editor and advertising and publicity manager, in which capacity he selected and adapted for the screen and later exploited "the first thirty Famous Features." It is of interest that it was he who selected "Tess of the Storm Country" for Mary Pickford and "Wildflower" for Marguerite Clark, the first for a long time considered Mary Pickford's greatest success, and the second of which established Miss Clark overnight as one of the foremost favorites of the screen, and it was he who Mr. Zukor once publicly announced "delivered his message to the world." He was appointed general manager of Paramount in 1915 under Hiram Abrams, and has been closely identified with him ever since. They have been described as ideal collaborators, and their detailed announcement is awaited with interest.

December 15 Attractions at New York Theatres

STRAND.—Vivian Martin in the Paramount production, "Mirandy Smiles," was the screen star at the Strand the week of December 15. The picture was directed by William C. De Mille, and Douglas McLean is the leading member of the support. A new comedy, a scenic study, educational and travel studies, and the Strand Topical Review completed the picture program. Alys Michot and the Strand Ladies Quartette were the vocal artists.

RIALTO.—"Branding Broadway," with William S. Hart in evening clothes for the first time on the screen, was the leading attraction at the Rialto. Seena Owen and Arthur Shirley are in the cast. Mack Sennett's latest comedy, "Hide and Seek, Detectives," a scenic of Versailles and the Rialto Animated Magazine were also shown. Vincent Ballester was the soloist.

RIVOLI.—Douglas Fairbanks in his new version of the Augustus Thomas stage success, "Arizona," headed the program at the Rivoli. The production and company are fine and the star puts in his usual number of stunts. Marjorie Daw and Kathleen Kirkham are members of the cast. A new Mutt and Jeff cartoon, the Official Allied War Review and a scenic completed the screen cartoon features. The Rialto Male Quartette, Annie Rosner and Carlos Mejia were the vocalists.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—First half, J. Warren Kerrigan in "Three X. Gordon." Latter half, "Under Four Flags."

BROADWAY.—Priscilla Dean in "The Wild Cat of Paris."

Blackwood Heads Scenario Department.

The scenario department of the Robertson-Cole Company has been moved to the coast in order to effect a closer co-operation by this department with the producers. John M. Blackwood, for many years a newspaper man and for twelve years manager of the Belasco Theatre of Los Angeles, and more recently with the Thomas H. Ince scenario department, is in charge of this department.

Jack Cohn Is Commended.

SCREEN LETTER TAKES JOY TO YANKS

"Smiles" Picture Made on Salem Common Shown to Soldiers on Battle Front on Armistice Day

We have been indebted to George Balsdon for several interesting letters from "over there," but his report from the front line, on the day the armistice went into effect, carries especial interest now that peace has come. In a letter sent from Paris November 17, Mr. Balsdon tells how the boys were made happy by the exhibition of a "Smiles" picture on the battle line. We have had many references to these films being "produced" on this side by the folks at home, but Mr. Balsdon now supplies us with our first details of the fervor of joy with which the boys welcomed their loved ones, in shadow form, on the fighting front. Mr. Balsdon writes:

"I left Paris November 5, for a trip to the front, and had about the most remarkable and exciting trip I have had since I came over. The Rotary Club of Salem, Mass., from which town a large number of artillerymen were recruited, conceived the idea of sending the boys from Salem and surrounding towns a moving picture "letter," so they invited all the parents, wives, sweethearts and any relatives to a meeting on Salem Common, and then formed them into groups, and marched them in front of the movie camera; the women waving and throwing kisses and the men with hats off, and waving.

Soldiers Wild With Enthusiasm.

"After the picture was finished it was sent to us to get it to the boys, so I took a motion picture apparatus and screen in an auto, and started for the front. Found most of the batteries were on the front lines and could not show picture the first day I arrived; so went back to the rest line and showed it to the boys who were there—about 300. I had to use a small battery light for projection, and used a transparent screen so that they could see picture on both sides of the screen. I set up the apparatus in an empty barrack shed, and when I showed the picture they went wild with enthusiasm. Many recognized their parents and wives and kiddies, and some were filled with such mixed emotions they did not know whether to laugh or cry.

"You can imagine a soldier boy who has been over nearly a year, through the hell at the front lines, having the extreme pleasure of seeing his mother or wife and baby looking right at him and throwing kisses and smiling just as though they could see him. My! how they cheered, and during the whole show the guns were thundering, putting over a mighty offensive barrage into the Boche lines. It was real war music.

"The next day I went up to the Colonel's dugout (one built by the Boche and occupied by them for two years) and gave him and his staff a show. He saw his wife and family and enjoyed it immensely. The place was intended to hold six persons, but we got twenty into it. Had a hard time getting there, as I could only take the car to a certain distance on account of the mud and shell holes in the road. So we walked the rest of the way, a detail of soldiers helping carry the apparatus. I took moving pictures of the Colonel and staff outside of his dugout.

Sees the Last Shots Fired.

"The next morning we got word that hostilities would cease at 11 A. M., so myself and a captain went up to the front line batteries to be there when the last shot was fired. How those boys did work to put as many shots over as possible before eleven! The din was terrific, and punctually at the stroke of eleven everything stopped, and there was a quietude that was positively uncanny.

"I got some pictures of the batteries and crews (I have an official permit to take pictures), which will be sent to the Rotary Club of Salem to show to the boys and relatives, provided the censor passes them. I got permission from the Colonel to give the boys at the batteries a show, if it were possible, so toward evening I started down the line, and when I came to a battery I hung the screen on the back of the car, set up the machine in the road, lined up the boys on each side and gave them the show.

"I wish you could have watched that scene. It's one I'll never forget. Bonfires were going everywhere, both on our lines and the enemy's, and rockets were being fired in the air celebrating the finish.

"It was a cold but beautiful moonlight night, ammunition and supply wagons were incessantly passing to and fro, details of men going on outpost duty, and a real movie show going on, and the men seeing their relatives right on the front lines, with the gun battery and caissons as a background. It was wonderful. I gave three shows to as many batteries that night."

SEE TOO MUCH U. S. A. IN NEW REELS

Canadian Official Leads Protest Against Too Frequent Display of Yankee Flag and Army

In a sensational statement issued on December 4, T. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer for Ontario, made a hot criticism of the frequency with which American war dramas and views of activities of United States troops have been presented on screens in Ontario during the past year or two, to the almost total exclusion of Canadian and English military views.

The official letter, which was sent out to all Canadian film exchanges and a number of exhibitors, created a tremendous amount of comment among film men, newspapers and the general public. Immediately after the publication of the letter the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, announced that it had adopted the policy of eliminating foreign flags from pictures to be shown in Canada as much as possible.

The company also pointed out that camcramen frequently secured news views in Canadian cities and that these pictures eventually found their way to Canadian theatres. It was also admitted that the company permitted certain theatres to edit their news weeklies, and "American flag pictures" generally were deleted by these exhibitors.

Following the threat made by Mr. McGarry that he would order the Ontario Board of Censors to condemn all pictures in which the American Army or the American flag was "exalted" too frequently, the film exchange men of Toronto decided to hold a private meeting to discuss the subject. Mr. McGarry appealed to the exchanges to secure more Canadian or English views and he stated that he would give them an opportunity to work out their own salvation. Local exchange men stated that they expected to be able to make a satisfactory adjustment without the help of the censor board.

Manager Lee Devaney of the Toronto office of the Fox Film Corporation pointed out in a public interview that the American producers were interested first in producing pictures for American patrons and that the great bulk of prints are used solely in the United States. Canada and other countries are considered to a certain extent, said Mr. Devaney, but the Dominion depends upon film producers in the States almost entirely for pictures of all kinds.

H. F. Stonge, a Toronto exhibitor, declared that England should "loosen up" with war pictures and other releases. He offered the information that there are millions of feet of war film in England which have been "held up," and Canadian exchanges and exhibitors could not secure any prints. He suggested that the Canadian Government should get in touch with the British authorities.

LIEUTENANT MOORE HOME FROM FRANCE

Young Soldier Who Was "Brought Up" in New York Film Office Gets a Hearty Welcome

THE first hero from the ranks of the motion picture industry has returned home with high honors. He is First Lieutenant William J. Moore, formerly an employe of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The lieutenant arrived in New York on the steamship Maui on December 17 and was the first to reach shore. On his chest was pinned the Croix de Guerre.

Lieutenant Moore, immediately upon landing, went to the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on Fifth Avenue, where he was welcomed back by Adolph Zukor and other executives. In the outside offices all work was suspended.

The lieutenant is a member of the 165th Infantry, and was wounded twice and gassed once. It took much questioning on the part of his friends to ascertain how he won his French war cross. On March 7 he took command of a sector under heavy bombardment after his superior officer had been killed. He organized relief parties to dig out men who had been caught in dugouts that caved in, commanding this work and taking active part in it for twenty-four hours, holding out against a fierce bombardment in which forty-two men were lost and he himself shot through the right lung with a machine gun bullet.

"A week later I received a letter from the commanding general of the French army with the surprising information that I had been designated to receive the French decoration," said the lieutenant, "and I want to say that no amount of money would ever tempt me to part with this medal."

The bombardment in which Moore won his cross and was first wounded took place at Luneville. After recovering from his wound he again went into action at Baccarat. At Rouge Bouquet later he was severely gassed. He also took part in engagements at Badon Viller, St. Mihiel, and his latest fighting occurred in the Argonne Forest, where he was again wounded, a bullet passing through his leg.

Lieutenant Moore was connected with the National Guard, the old Sixty-ninth, New York, when the trouble with Mexico happened. At that time he resigned from Paramount and went to Mexico with his regiment as a private. His regiment sailed for France in October, 1917. He had left New York a sergeant, and after the Luneville "show" he was sent to the officers' training school upon recovering from his wounds.

Adolph Zukor Welcomes Back Lieutenant Moore.

John Von Herberg Looks Over Newest Production

JOHN VON HERBERG, of Jensen & Von Herberg, who control a circuit of high-grade theatres ranking among the foremost in the country, and easily the most profitable in the Northwest, arrived in town December 12 on one of his frequent visits to the city and left a week later for home, after looking over the newest films and freshening up his ideas generally. He was accompanied by Ralph Ruffner, of the Rialto, the Jensen & Von Herberg house in Butte.

Mr. Von Herberg, who is better known to most of the leading film men in the business simply as "Von," is a director in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and this, in part, accounts for his frequent visits to town, but he believes in seeing what the other fellow is doing all of the time. When he does get hold of an idea not already in practice in his houses he takes it back with him, but the Jensen & Von Herberg circuit has given more to the others than it has received from them, for the prosperity of the circuit is largely based upon the intensive application of the theory that perfect management is a more important factor in the success of a theatre than a star film, and the circuit houses are models in their way.

Irvin V. Willat Again Among Those Present

FOR Irvin V. Willatt, as for thousands of other soldiers, the war is over and he is back again among the home folks; said home folks including his brother, C. A. (Doc) Willat, and Mrs. Willat, and his mother. The family party will leave New York this week for a holiday trip to Florida, where the reunion will continue until the demands of business recall the Willat brothers to renewed activities in the picture game.

When Irvin Willat was last in New York he was a photographer, but when he joined Thomas H. Ince, about three years ago, he became a director. Two of his features are about to be released —a Paramount-Artcraft, "The False Face," with Henry Walthall, and a Select Special, "The Midnight Patrol"; the latter being a police propaganda picture which, Mr. Willat says, "is the only picture in captivity in which the cops get the best of things."

Presumably, when his Florida enchantment ends, Mr. Willat will return to Thomas H. Ince. Since becoming a director he has been working on special subjects, his thorough knowledge of every step taken in the making of moving pictures making him especially fitted to this class of work.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

LOS ANGELES STILL HAS FLUPHOBIA

Too Much Publicity Has Created Unpleasant Condition—Crowd Is Crime Only When in Theatre

THEATRES in Los Angeles were opened on December 2, after having been closed for fifty-two days. A survey of the situation since the opening shows that while business is better than it was immediately before the influenza ban, it is not at all what exhibitors hoped for, or anything at all like it should be, and that in spite of the official lifting of the restrictions, the flu scare is still with us, and likely to remain with us for some time to come.

This situation is the result of too much talk and too much publicity. All during the epidemic, long stories giving the number of new cases, deaths and other direful data were published in the papers daily.

No story was complete without frequent mention being made of theatres and the strenuous efforts being made by the health officers to combat the plague by keeping theatres and places of amusement closed.

Exhibitors got in long-winded wrangles with the health officials in their endeavors to get the town opened up to amusements, but nothing came of it except statements that it would be most unwise to open up the theatres; that the theatres, if opened, would increase the number of cases; this, until many people got the foolish idea into their heads that the entire situation depended on the opening or closing of the amusement houses.

The people are afraid of crowds in theatres, but they are not afraid of crowds anywhere else, and they never were afraid of crowds anywhere else, because there were no regulations against crowds in stores, restaurants, cafeterias and street cars. Everything except shows and churches were practically wide open during the worst of the epidemic.

Today thousands of shoppers are crowding the big and the little stores all day long. Christmas buying is at its height. The people surge and crowd and jam, tire themselves out, lessen their resistance to disease by fatigue, stand on the street corners in the rain waiting for cars, and then ride home in the cars packed like sardines—but they are afraid to spend an hour and a half in a comfortably appointed, well-ventilated theatre in the afternoon or evening because they have the word "theatre" and the word "flu" tangled up in their minds until they are almost synonymous terms. Great damage was suffered by Los Angeles showmen during the close-down, and the loss is still going on.

Peace is here. The minds of the people are free of the strain of war. The holidays are upon us. Thousands of tourists are in town. It should be the most prosperous season of the year—of four years!

The exhibitors should appeal to the local press for a campaign of editorial advice and discussion that would serve to conquer the foolish fears of the public. Unless something is done, the loss will go on as long as there is a cough, a cold or a sneeze left in the city.

Photoplayers Aid Christmas Fund.

At a big festival given on December 17 in the Majestic Theatre under the auspices of a Los Angeles daily newspaper, a number of players for the screen gave their services, appearing in vaudeville numbers, songs and sketches, to help swell the fund that will provide baskets of food and other cheer to innumerable poor families on Christmas Day.

Charlie Murray appeared in his familiar role of master of ceremonies, and among the players who entertained the audience were Julian Eltinge, Doraldina, Ralph Herz, and all the Mack Sennett comedians. Mrs. Carrie Jacobs Bond, composer of such famous songs as "Perfect Day" and "Just a Wearyin' for You," sang several of her old and new favorites.

Hayakawas Both Ill of Flue.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aoki, were both laid up with influenza at the same time during the weeks that the epidemic was at its height in Los Angeles. No nurse could be found to take care of the invalids, but Mrs. Hayakawa's Japanese maid and the chauffeur took turns in the sick room until the patients began to recover, when Mr. Hayakawa suffered a relapse, from which he is just now recovering. He expects to begin a production within a week or so if no further complications interfere.

Parsons in New Comedies.

"Smiling" Billy Parsons is being directed in a series of six new comedies by Harry Pollard, who made a big reputation as the creator of the American Beauty comedies while with the American Film Company. Parsons will be seen in an entirely new comedy role as "Go Gettem Potts," a good-natured promoter, who, while he makes money on every proposition he touches, has many amusing experiences in rounding out his deals.

Brentwood Shows First Film.

"The Turn in the Road," the initial feature of the newly formed Brentwood Corporation, was given a preview to officials of the company, members of the cast and a number of invited guests at the Iris Theatre in Hollywood on December 10.

The photoplay, which was directed by King Vidor, who is also its author, tells a simple and wholesome story, the main incidents of which have come within the experience of many people, and it is offered by its sponsors as the beginning of a new order of pictures which they believe will be welcomed by the public.

The cast is headed by Helen Jerome Eddy, Lloyd Hughes and little Ben Alexander. Winter Hall and George Nichols are prominent in supporting roles.

New Universal Serial Begun.

J. P. MacGowan has begun the production of an eighteen episode serial entitled "The Fifth Ace," at Universal City, with Marie Walcamp in the star part. Pat O'Malley plays opposite, and Alfred Allen, Andrew Waldron, Thomas Lingham, Edgar Allen and Leon de la Mothe, erstwhile Kent, play important supporting roles.

Jack Oberle May Be Alive.

A recent letter from Ivan Kahn to his mother in Los Angeles states that Ivan talked with Jack Oberle, son of Florence Oberle, screen actress, after the armistice was signed, which means that Jack was still alive on the date of his reported death. Young Oberle had been very ill in hospital when Kahn saw him, which probably gave rise to the report of his death.

Falls Fifteen Feet.

Aurora Mardiganian, the Armenian girl who is playing a leading role in a Selig production, fell fifteen feet during the making of a scene showing her escaping from a second-story window. The girl sprained both her ankles severely, which will cause her to remain away from the studio for several weeks.

How About This?

One S. P. Trood, who dopes out publicity for the Brentwood players, comes along with a suggestion that since the word "audiences" applies to people who congregate for the purpose of listening to things, why should not people who gather together to look at things be called "optinces"? Why not, indeed? They have been called a number of things and showed no resentment—it may be that they will stand for "optinces."

Nazimova Here.

Mme. Alla Nazimova has arrived in Los Angeles, and after a brief trip to the studio she abandoned everything to search for a bungalow. Mme. Nazimova says she has lived in houses, flats, mansions, palaces and apartments, but never in a bungalow, and she is anxious to get a real bungalow in the country where they originated, and have a yard and flowers and chickens and everything.

Jack Pickford "In Wrong."

Jack Pickford, who, with his mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, returned to filmland recently, brought a contract to make at least three pictures for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The first of these pictures will be "In Wrong," similar in story and atmosphere to the Mark Twain stories, and will be given the same style of treatment in its transference to film. James Kirkwood will direct the production at the Brunton studio.

Gunn a Victim of Flu.

Charles Gunn died on December 6 at his home in Hollywood, of influenza, at the age of thirty-six years. Mr. Gunn was a well-known figure in the dramatic stock and motion picture world, having been active in screen work for the past two years.

He was leading man for the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco for a number of years, and played for two seasons on the New York dramatic stage. He appeared in a number of films with the Thomas H. Ince company, the Triangle, and the Brunton, where he supported Mme Yorska in "The Infernal Net," which has just been finished.

Mr. Gunn was an officer in the Hollywood Officer's Training School, of which he was one of the organizers. Mrs. Nina Gunn, the player's widow, and his mother, Mrs. Samuel Gunn, survive him.

Actor's Widow Engaged.

The widow of the late Eric Campbell, who was killed in an automobile accident about a year ago, has announced her engagement to W. H. Corcoran of Kansas City. Mrs. Campbell is a sister of Mrs. Mabel Gilman Corey, wife of the steel man. Eric Campbell was a familiar character in Chaplin comedies prior to his death.

Star Loses Mother.

Mrs. Rose Barham, of Glendale, mother of Nell Shipman, died on December 7. Miss Shipman was ill of influenza at the time of her mother's death, and her husband, Ernest Shipman, was also having a siege of the disease at the same time.

D. W. Griffith is making a picture called "Limehouse Nights," which, instead of dealing with the late war, is a story with Chinese characters and atmosphere, and features Lillian Gish, Richard Barthelmess and Donald Crisp.

Ethel Lynne, of Christie Comedies; Stanhope Wheatcroft, and Frank Mayo, who helped Charles A. Taylor's unnamed star make "The Girl with the Horses," are now working in a Mary MacLaren film called "Whose Widow?"

The "Smile" films for the boys over there, which were discontinued during the "flu" quarantine, have been resumed at Lincoln Park, when literally thousands of relatives of men in service passed before the camera.

JOE BRANDT'S "IT" AGAIN.

"IMPORTANT—From Tarkington Baker, Director of Publicity, Universal-News for Immediate Use.

"* * * And now Brandt turns to a new field. He has been called upon to undertake another difficult task—and a bigger task. Beginning with the first of the new year, Universal's assistant treasurer—for Brandt occupies that office as well—will devote himself to the promotion of the greatest cooperative system ever established in the history of motion picture exploitation. All of Universal's numerous departments will be coordinated in the new campaign.

"His work, nation-wide in scope, will take Universal's assistant treasurer on frequent and extended tours of the exchanges. Brandt will carry the campaign direct to all the leading cities and all the leading newspapers. The entire campaign, in all its details, involving the most advanced step thus far undertaken by any film producing company, will rest completely in Brandt's hands. Not a little of his time, too, will be spent in the studios at Universal City, where he will have much to do with the selection of serial scenarios particularly and with other essential phases of production.

"Mr. Brandt's assumption of these new duties means a most substantial step forward for Universal. It means, to state the matter briefly, increased cooperation for the exhibitor—the development of a new field of exploitation, and, what is of equal importance, its development in the thorough, vigorous, effective manner that is characteristic of Brandt.

"In his new capacity, the title of assistant treasurer still attaches to Brandt's name and, while he is putting his new policies into execution, he will continue, as heretofore, to discharge the duties of that important executive office as well."

Now you know what Joe Brandt's going to do.

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS" SHOWS REAL WAR

Government Film Will Give Public Reflections of Combat They Deem Their Own

THE question of the present day status of war pictures has elicited the published opinions of a number of prominent men in the industry and they seem to be about evenly divided in their views as to whether or not war pictures are through and no longer wanted by the public.

An interesting and logical discourse on the subject is given by Raymond S. Harris, traveling representative of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, who has recently completed a tour of the Middle West in connection with the official presentations of "Under Four Flags."

"If there is going to be a war-after-the-war on the question of whether war pictures are still attracting the public, I will jump very cheerfully into the discussion, because I have just been arguing and observing that exhibitor's problem," said Mr. Harris. "In connection with the special work I have been doing for the Division of Films I have traveled through the heart of the Middle West, and feel that I know from my experience to what the public will respond.

"Make no mistake, war fact will draw the crowds if the picture is presented from exactly the point of view taken, for instance, by S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis. He just presented 'Under Four Flags,' the latest big war feature, as a 'Victory Picture of America and the Allies.' His advertisement dwelt on the fact that the battles shown were the actual combats that brought about peace. McCormick evidently reasoned that people cannot be indifferent to the war; they must of course be interested in it very vitally. But they are simply no longer interested in it as combatants—they are interested as victors.

"That seems to me the point of view every exhibitor should take, if he wants to crowd his theatre. Put on a fact picture about the war—and regard the public as victors, not combatants, in giving them information about the picture.

"Just look into your own reactions. During the war you fought every foot of a war fact picture; you ground your teeth and exulted, and drove bayonets through the foe. Now you sit back with a self-satisfied feeling of power and victory at the same sort of picture—and you cheer like the very dickens when our boys come into the shadow box.

"Why? I guess because our army is us. When we fought, there in the theatres during the fighting, we were fighting for ourselves; when we applaud the army now, we applaud ourselves. As long as that emotion exists—and it is a part of unchanging human nature—the right appeal will crowd the theatre that shows a war fact picture. But the appeal should be right. Remember that we are now victors—and that we want to see just how we won that war, anyway."

William Laub, Navy Cameraman.

William B. Laub, who was engaged in the photographic department of the Goldwyn Company, and assisted in the production of "The Hell Cat" and a number of other Goldwyn productions, is now a member of the Aviation Division of the Bureau of Ordnance and has been taking pictures up in the air. He intimates he has seen things that would have made life mighty unpleasant for the Kaiser if the war had continued.

Mr. Laub's present rating is "Printer, First Class," but something much better has been promised. Each photographer, he says, does most all of his own laboratory work, run and title his own stuff. Bell & Howell cinemachinery is used exclusively. With the experience he is getting Mr. Laub ought to be a valuable man to some picture producer when he gets out of the service.

MOORE'S BEAUTIFUL RIALTO IS OPEN

Outstanding Feature of Washington City's Newest Picture House Is Its Foyer Ballroom

THE third of the new houses to be opened in Washington, D. C., the Rialto, will stand well in comparison with any of its kind in the country It contains many novelties that add to its beauty and attractiveness and the foyer is a place of grandeur.

The Rialto faces on Ninth street and is near G street. Its front is of Indiana limestone with marble panels. A brightly lighted glass-roofed marquise extends from the building to the curb, and the structure is surmounted by a large electric sign and clock. There is a large storeroom on each side of the entrance lobby. The ticket booth is at the building line.

The entrance lobby, in Ionic style, presents an attractive appearance, being a reproduction in marble of the Temple of Apollo. The color scheme is carried out in blue and gold. Instead of opening directly into the auditorium proper, the entrance lobby gives the Rialto one of its unique and extremely effective novelties in design—a foyer ballroom, with stained glass domed ceiling thirty-five feet high. It is sixty feet long and forty-five feet wide, in oval form.

On the evening of the opening of the theatre this room held the attention of the guests. The lighting gave to it a moonlight appearance, and in the center an electric fountain played, while around the room were singing birds in pedestal cages. Around the room also are marble rest benches and the decorative treatment of the whole place is pleasing. There are statues of Adonis and Minerva in the wall niches. There are rest rooms on each side for men and for women patrons.

2,000 Seats on Orchestra Floor.

From this room one enters the audiorium. There is not a step in the theatre and 2,000 person can be seated on the floor level. No balcony has been built, although this can be done at a later date in the event that it is desired. There are no posts, pillars or obstructions of any kind to impair the view of the spectator.

Forming a horseshoe across the middle of the house and down the sides is a tier of loge boxes, sufficiently elevated to command an unobstructed view of the screen over the heads of those occupying orchestra chairs in front, and sufficiently low to be out of the line of vision of those seated in orchestra chairs at the rear. The front row seat nearest the picture is thirty-five feet removed from the screen.

The main entrance across the proscenium arch is of silk velour. The screen curtain is of satin. The dominant color note here is plum and canary yellow. Over the proscenium and on each side are illuminated paintings, representing Grecian field scenes. The walls are paneled in plum-colored silk tapestry. The wide seats are upholstered in tapestry and the boxes contain comfortable wicker chairs. The railings of the box are of marble.

Orchestra on Raised Platform.

The orchestra occupies a raised platform immediately in front of the stage instead of in a pit, and supplementing it is a three-manual Austin pipe organ. The auditorium is 150 feet long, 100 feet wide, and 50 feet high. There are twice as many exits as are required by law and these are indicated by illuminated glass signs. The ventilation is very good, the outside air being drawn through to a nine-foot fan and blown over heating coils. The air is then washed, heated again and blown through tunnels to mushrooms heating the auditorium. A battery of six-foot fans take care of the exhaust and drive the stale air through the roof.

The auditorium can be emptied in two minutes in case of need. The lighting can be controlled from three different places in the house. The lighting system is unique, not a fixture being visible. Through the entrance lobby and foyer single cove lighting is used; in the auditorium there is a three color system which permits of the blending of shades to desired colors and the intensity is controlled by dimmers.

The musicians and dressing rooms are back of the stage. The offices of Tom Moore, and of his assistants, E. G. Evans, general manager, and "Bob" Long, manager of the house, are on the second floor over the lobby. Here also are the general offices and cashiers' rest rooms. These are all attractively fitted out and are bright and cheery.

North Carolina Ministers Make Move for Censorship

North Carolina will stage its first censorship fight during the coming session of the state legislature which meets at Raleigh early in January. The first movement for censorship of all motion picture films exhibited in the state comes from the ministerial association of Wilmington and through them is being spread throughout the principal centers of the state for similar action in these cities, and indications are that the supporters of censorship will be strongly lined up before the legislature meets.

Opinion is that the clergymen would create a board similar to the Ohio and Maryland censorship organizations, the resolutions adopted suggesting procedure to the committee in charge and pointing to the fact that the board could be maintained without cost to the state through the placing of a tax on film footage or on the theatres.

President Percy W. Wells, of the State Exhibitors' League, is marshalling the official forces of the organization to make a strong fight against legalized censorship in the state and a special meeting of the league will be called soon after Christmas to formulate plans for combating the movement.

Plaza Rebooks "Under Four Flags."

The rebooking of "Under Four Flags" at the Plaza, Fifty-ninth Street and Madison Avenue, is another indication of the extreme popularity of the Government picture and of the demand of the public for its exhibiton. On the first booking, December 9 and 10, special morning performances were given for children. Manager Gosdorfer states that 1200 children attended the first morning and 1500 the next. He is enthusiastic over the engagement, saying it was the most enjoyable booking he ever made on account of the wild enthusiasm of the youngsters. This enthusiasm was communicated to their parents who attended at night, packing the theatre to its doors. Mr. Gosdorfer has rebooked the picture for two more days.

Madge Kennedy Reaches Coast.

Madge Kennedy has joined the group of Goldwyn stars at work in the big new studios of the company at Culver City, Cal. Tom Moore, Mae Marsh and Mabel Normand preceded her to the Coast in the order named, leaving only Geraldine Farrar and Pauline Frederick of the presently engaged stars to follow. Miss Frederick is at work in the old Biograph studio, the Bronx, on her first Goldwyn Picture and Miss Farrar is busy with her opera engagements. She will not go west until spring.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

FILMLAND is perked up this week. Almost everybody is happy, the studios are going full blast and the shows are open. I tell you it's a grand good thing the shows opened when they did. With no movies to guide them some of our actors were letting their art get rusty for lack of encouragement. It was as if a tailor were to try to make suits with never a coat or a pair of trousers passing on the street to tell him that people were still wearing clothes.

The old town is pretty gay, with the shows all running, and now, since the moist season is with us, and Jupiter Pluvius playing regular engagements, the popular outdoor sport of going downtown and watching the girls get carried across Broadway has been revived.

The two-legged ferries that operate from curb to curb on Broadway just after a heavy rain are institutions that are found in no other city. Why they are not listed as one of the attractions of Southern California is hard to understand. Maybe it is the well-known reticence of the native son.

The wet weather transportation system is efficacious as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. The human gondolas being volunteers, they choose their own freight. This results in discrimination and in confining the traffic to passengers of tender years and light tonnage. No feminine person tipping the scales at anything more than ten stone need apply. Hefty Hebes must wait till the street runs dry—or wade.

One Day It Didn't Rain.

One of the days it didn't rain I went out to Culver City. The Goldwyn studios are located at Culver City. This statement is made merely to conform to local geographical detail, otherwise it might be said with perfect truth that Culver City is located at the Goldwyn studios.

Goldwyn is a whale of a place—the most impressive studio on the Coast. All of the buildings are white; tall, graceful columns rear their noble proportions skyward all along the street. A gate wide enough to accommodate a troop of horses opens into the grounds, where more white buildings, beds of flowers and squares of lawn can be seen. Strangers and tourists passing the place rub their eyes and exclaim: "Hello, who's starting up a World's Fair out here?"

Goldwyn is a busy as well as a beautiful place. It used to be a busy place when Triangle was operating at the plant, but it is busier now. But busy as it is, the people out there are not too busy to be courteous and friendly.

I saw all of the official force, with the exception of Vice President Lehr, who was away in the city on business. Manager of Productions Mason Litson took me over the grounds and filled me up with staggering statistics.

Five Big Glass Studios for Goldwyn.

There are five of the biggest glass studios in the country, and an open stage with more than 24,000 square feet of space all on one floor. Ten companies can work on that stage at one time with perfect freedom.

We looked at the film vaults, the restaurant, the planing mills, the carpenter shops, the dressing rooms arranged like the staterooms of a big liner, the supply house that is called "the country store," in charge of a chap named Buell, who can produce anything from a cook stove to a coffin at a minute's notice.

I met Thomas Miranda—I'm calling him Thomas for politeness' sake—he's one of the guys you call Tom after you've known him for about five minutes. Tom is the film editor.

Then I was introduced to Hugo Ballin, art director; Clifford Robertson, casting director; Joseph Cohn, business manager of the studios; a chap named Eddington, who is head bookkeeper or something like that, and J. G. Hawkes, who came over from the Thomas H. Ince plant to be scenario chief.

We inspected art rooms, property rooms, scene docks, the yard, the lawns, the gardens where flowers are grown for use in the sets, and more gardens with pergolas and summer houses and pavilions and bosky dells, and Abe Schultz and his very complete laboratory, and then I went over on one of the stages and watched Clarence Badger directing Mabel Normand in "Sis Hopkins."

Mabel Normand
In Her Best "Sis" Makeup.

John Bowers was playing the opposite lead; Thomas Jefferson was Pa Hopkins; Eugenie Forde was Miss Peckover, and Sam De Grasse was doing the heavy.

Mabel Is Creating a New "Sis."

They were working in the Hopkins kitchen, and Miss Normand was in one of her best "Sis" make-ups. I wished that Rose Melville could have seen her. I won't say that Mabel Normand is going to be a better Sis Hopkins than Rose Melville, but she is going to give a fine interpretation of the part; she is going to make Sis more human and less of a caricature than she was on the regular stage. Mabel understands Sis to be what she was—not a caricature, but a real lovable being under grotesque make-up.

Reginald Barker was making scenes for "The Brand," a new Rex Beach story, on another stage, but Tom Moore and Harry Beaumont were out on location, and I had to miss them. I particularly wanted to see Harry Beaumont because he was born and bred in Old Missouri, but I'll have to wait until I go out to Goldwyn again, which I am going to do as soon as Mae Marsh gets out of the hospital and Madge Kennedy and the rest of the forces come on from the East.

Detroit Exchange Managers Adopt List of Trade Rules

THE film exchange managers of Detroit held their annual banquet and business meeting at the Board of Commerce on December 21, and invited every film salesman to be present, making a total attendance with invited guests of approximately seventy-five film men. It was the most interesting and noteworthy meeting ever held in Detroit by the film exchange end of the business.

The Board of Motion Picture Exchange managers, comprising 100 per cent of the members eligible in Detroit, have adopted a set of trade rules, and it was for the purpose of thoroughly explaining the trade rules to the film salesmen that the meeting was held. Exchange managers are going to back up the trade rules and will insist that the film salesmen do not deviate from them in transacting business with exhibitors through the state.

One of the big changes to come after the first of the year is the abolishing of C. O. D. shipments, and the necessity of exhibitors having their checks into the exchange before the film is shipped. This is a drastic step to take, but it is the only solution of a trade abuse that has caused a loss of thousands and thousands of dollars to film exchanges.

Soldiers Re-enter Fox Employ.

In pursuance with the Fox Film Corporation's policy of re-employing men who left the organization to enter war service, two more Fox men have returned to their former positions. Sam Dembow, Jr., formerly Fox branch manager at Atlanta, Ga., has resumed management of the Atlanta exchange, succeeding F. G. Marchman. Burt C. Phillips, who left the Exhibitors Service Bureau to accept a commission as lieutenant in the Signal Corps, has returned as photographer in the bureau. Last week George Dembow, formerly branch manager at Philadelphia, resumed his old position, having been honorably discharged from the army after winning a lieutenant's commission.

Irving Maas, for the last several months head of the requisition department in the Fox home office, has been transferred to Chicago as assistant manager of the Chicago exchange. He is succeeded in the requisition department in the home office by W. E. Sennett.

Division of Films Denies Competing with Industry

IT was hardly conceivable that the resolutions presented to the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress at Atlantic City by the delegation from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry should pass without a protest. Naturally, the protest would come from the Division of Films, against the activities of which the resolutions were aimed, so we present it without further comment:

New York, December 12, 1918.

To Messrs. Walter W. Irwin, John C. Flinn, William C. Smith and Frederick S. Elliott, representing the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen: The Division of Films of the United States Committee on Public Information has received a copy of the resolution drawn up by your committee at a meeting held at Atlantic City, on December 5, 1918.

Your resolution features the assistance the motion picture industry has rendered to the United States Government in its Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives and departmental activities such as War, Navy, Food, Fuel, Agriculture and other departments. This splendid and generous help and co-operation has been acknowledged by the President of the United States and by those associated with him.

You claim that the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information has "competed" with the motion picture industry on releasing its official war features and weekly reviews "at a profit," and want these activities turned over to private film agencies.

The Division of Films has not competed with the motion picture industry, as it purposely avoided creating an expensive and elaborate mechanism for distribution. On the other hand, through competitive bids, it allowed the distributors of the United States to employ their physical facilities and exchanges for this purpose.

Of necessity the official film material was taken by the Signal Corps' photographers of the army and the official photographers of the navy, no privately staged material whatsoever being utilized. All of the official film portrayed intimately and accurately the military and industrial preparations in the United States and the splendid accomplishments of our armies on the battle fronts of Europe.

The rental prices to exhibitors of which you complain were determined by a most fair and equitable procedure in which each exhibitor indicated his average daily receipts and the price he could afford to pay to return him a profit and still play to crowded houses.

The "profits" of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information which you apparently object to were, by Act of Congress under date of June 17, 1917, turned over to the United States Treasury, and represent a direct return to the taxpayers. The fact that the Division of Films did operate on this basis and return substantial sums to the United States Treasury is a matter of general knowledge and has been gratefully appreciated by those who know the tremendous cost of this world war.

On the other hand, had these films been released to the exhibitors at cost, as you suggest, you would have been justified in claiming that the standardized priced releases of privately produced features would be placed in jeopardy. This would have been "ruinous competition" indeed.

Furthermore, the Committee on Public Information, through an extensive community campaign, has brought thousands upon thousands of new patrons to the motion picture theatres of the country. The "people's films" had a drawing power second to none. Throughout the United States and in foreign countries these films showed that the Allies and the United States must ultimately win the war, and their value in this respect can not be overestimated.

As a war organization similar to the War Trade Board, the War Industries Board, and other departments created as war emergency bodies, the Committee on Public Information will cease to exist upon the signing of the peace proclamation. It has already reduced to a minimum its activities, as it has no desire to perpetuate itself. The third official war feature, "Under Four Flags," is the last official feature to be distributed. The Official War Review continues only during the period embraced by the present activities of our army and navy.

The Division of Films is now completing a record of which it is justly proud.

The motion picture industry of the United States has been immeasurably benefited by its existence.

MARCUS A. BEEMAN, Acting Director, Division of Films, Committee on Public Information.

George R. Meeker.

World Pictures Engages Meeker as Sales Manager

WORLD Pictures announces the engagement of George R. Meeker, lately connected with the Division of Films in charge of the distribution of the official Government pictures, as general sales manager of World Pictures. Mr. Meeker will assume his new position on January 1.

Mr. Meeker entered the picture business when Klaw & Erlanger entered into an arrangement with the Biograph company. Following this he became an exhibitor and specialized on taking over small theatres, building up their business, creating circuits and then disposing of them. After successfully following this line of endeavor he was engaged by Paramount and put in charge of their short subjects, both as regards manufacturing and distribution. Mr. Meeker is credited with having created the pictograph, the first film magazine.

Realizing the importance of names in such an enterprise he did what a number of editors had done in establishing successful magazines—employing notable writers and artists. The first appearance of former President Roosevelt on the screen, as a writer, was due to Mr. Meeker's efforts.

His next position of importance in the industry was recorded when he went to the World Film Corporation and was placed on the personal staff of the General Manager. He was then transferred to be manager of the Philadelphia branch. His energy, acumen and initiative attracted the attention of the late Stanley V. Mastbaum, who persuaded him to become general manager of the Stanley Booking Corporation. He remained with this organization until at the request of the Government he resigned his position to take charge and handle the distribution of the Government pictures made under the direction of the Division of Films.

In taking up his new duties, Mr. Meeker brings with him a wide acquaintanceship with conditions that exist in the industry that are national in their scope, his experience having been gathered from all sources. He is not bound by impressions that grow out of insularity.

Metro's 1918 Has Been Its Best Twelvemonth

THE year 1918 will go down in the annals of Metro Pictures Corporation as the most active and brilliant, from an artistic, production, and achievement standpoint, in the history of the company.

In production, in volume of business done, in studios operated, in improvement of producing facilities, in the introduction and development of new stars, in the number of worth-while and popular novels and national magazine stories adapted for its stars, in the screening of the latest and biggest Broadway stage successes, in the number of persons employed, in the companies of actors maintained, in directorial strength, in capital utilized, in consistency in the high quality of its All Star Series pictures, in the aid given exhibitors in compelling display advertising, press sheets, broadsides, cuts, paper and other helps, in the continuance of the policy of first-hand cooperation with the exhibitor—in all these respects, and in numerous others, the year 1918, according to Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, has been the most satisfactory and significant in the history of the company, the war and the influenza epidemic notwithstanding.

During the period of 1918 the organization has made more than sixty-two All-Star Series features, distributed the monthly super de luxe productions of Screen Classics, Inc., spent many thousands of dollars in enlarging and improving its studios and laboratories and purchasing the rights to novels, plays and manuscripts for future use, and finally has begun the erection of one of the most complete and up-to-the-minute studios in the world in Hollywood, California, a studio which, when finished, will accommodate more than a dozen big companies at the same time.

Metro's steady expansion and increased activities throughout the year is attributable to the constructive business policy of the company, based on the confidence that the exhibitor has in the organization's promises, the box-office and artistic qualities of the pictures distributed by Metro. The year 1919, it is announced, will even surpass the 1918 achievements, as the majority of its productions will be made under California skies and in studios that are equipped for the very finest and most finished product obtainable.

General Moves Minneapolis Office.

After having been for a long time at 909 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, the General Film Company exchange in the Minnesota metropolis has removed to a more prominent location in the Loeb Arcade Building. Here the General's office occupies the Suite 406-418, with every up-to-date equipment. Manager C. R. Michel has been highly complimented upon this move, since the exchange is now in the heart of things in Minneapolis. The building is controlled by Ruben & Finkelstein, the big showmen of Minneapolis.

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON OFF TO EUROPE

New Distribution Arrangement in British Isles for "Flying A" Pictures—Will Also Visit France

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, Inc., left Chicago for Europe Monday evening, December 16, and sailed from New York at the close of the same week. Mr. Hutchinson states that his trip is purely on matters of business and he attributes the securing of his passport to the fact that he owns large interests in London and on the continent, which he has been unable to visit since the Fall of 1914, when the war opened. He was caught in Europe at that time.

Mr. Hutchinson states that his chief object in going abroad at present is to effect new distribution arrangements for his product in the British Isles. He will be gone several months and expects to visit France before he returns.

His headquarters will be made in London, at his London establishment, the American Company (London), Limited, 89-91 Wardour street. While there he will conclude an entirely new arrangement for the distribution of "Flying A" pictures in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

"While our pictures have been enjoying great popularity all over the British Isles, I believe we can secure even better distribution for them and establish them still higher in the regard of British exhibitors under several plans which I have in mind," said Mr. Hutchinson. "I shall be glad to give you full details regarding our new distribution methods upon my return. I would do so now but for the fact that I am not sure myself which of several distribution arrangements will meet with the fullest approval of British exhibitors.

"As I have said, this will be the first visit I have been able to pay the London offices of American Film Company, Inc., since the Fall of 1914, and you may be sure I am expecting to note many changes. I am confident, however, that our present type of releases—the subjects starring Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher—which we are selling direct to the exhibitor in this country through special representatives in each of the Pathe exchanges, will be warmly welcomed by the British exhibitors and public."

"Speaking of your foreign sales, have you lost any shipments during the war by submarine warfare?" was asked.

"Not a foot of film," replied Mr. Hutchinson. "We have received some mighty fine appreciations of our releases from the other side," he continued, "but the films now being shown over there are those which we released in this country before we placed our own salesmen in each of the Pathe exchanges. Thus you can see that the Britishers have yet to view what we really consider our best photoplays, and I fully expect when we begin offering them these newer subjects, the 'Flying A' brand will become more popular than ever.

"Before I return to America, as I have hinted before, I shall visit France on business and, while there, hope to be able to spend some time with my son, Hobart, who is with the Motor Section, Headquarters Battalion, Third Army, which now occupies the country along the Rhine.

Samuel S. Hutchinson.

"While in France I may close an arrangement by which Pathe will handle our product in territory not served by our British connection," Mr. Hutchinson remarked incidentally.

Mr. Hutchinson then laughingly related some of his experiences on his last trip to France, when he was caught in Alsace at the outbreak of the war, telling of difficulties encountered and surmounted in getting back to England. He expressed the hope, in smiling fashion, that on this trip it would not be necessary for him to assume the disguise of an American "doughboy" in order to secure a return passage, after he has completed his business and heads homeward.

Anita Stewart Helps the Poor.

Anita Stewart, the popular photoplay star, now engaged in the production of new features in Los Angeles, recently sent her check for $250 to the Chicago Herald-Examiner in aid of that paper's Christmas Fund. Not only this, Miss Stewart has volunteered to mail her autographed photo to every subscriber to the fund. This fund will be devoted to giving a Christmas dinner to poor families and others in Chicago.

Flaherty Chicago Manager of Film Clearing House, Inc.

ON December 1, Frank J. Flaherty was appointed Chicago manager of the Film Clearing House, Inc., and of the Independent Sales Corporation, and the quarters formerly occupied by the Chicago exchange of the George Kleine System, at 207 South Wabash avenue, were taken over as the Chicago headquarters for both the organizations mentioned. The Film Clearing House, Inc., has also taken over all the other branch offices of the George Kleine System throughout the country—nineteen in all.

Manager Flaherty moved into the new offices Monday, December 9, and is much pleased with them, as they are among the best planned and equipped in the business.

Previous to his present appointment Mr. Flaherty was connected with the Silee Film Exchange, in the Consumers Building, which had a contract with the Producing Distributors Corporation for the physical distribution of that company's product, the contract expiring when the Film Clearing House, Inc., was established. It must be understood that the Film Clearing House, Inc., engages only in the physical distribution of film subjects.

When seen last week Mr. Flaherty informed the writer that the first release on the $10, $20 and $30 plan is Evelyn Nesbitt in "Her Mistake," which will be released January 1. The second release on the same plan will be made February 1, and so on throughout the year, 12 subjects being released in that time, at monthly intervals. The second release is "Life's Greatest Problem" by J. Stuart Blackton, which features Mitchell Lewis and Ruby Deremer.

"Wanted for Murder," the first of the big special releases, will be out January 1. It features Elaine Hammerstein and has been showing at the Broadway Theatre, New York, where it attracted much attention.

Rex Lawhead, formerly manager of the Playhouse on Michigan avenue, and also connected with the sales department of Universal and Foursquare exchanges for about five years, has been appointed assistant manager of the sales department of the Independent Sales Corporation, in the Chicago office. Mr. Lawhead was also the first Chicago manager of Bluebird Pictures, Inc.

H. B. Brennan, traveling auditor for the Film Clearing House, Inc., was in Chicago all last week, introducing the auditing system adopted by the company. He left for Minneapolis December 14 to install the system in the office there.

Frank J. Flaherty is widely known in Chicago film circles. He has been connected with the exchange business in the city for the past eight years. No other man can claim a more familiar acquaintance with exhibitors in Chicago territory than he, and this territory includes, besides the city, Northern Illinois, Northern Indiana, Southern Wisconsin and the river counties of Iowa.

Mr. Flaherty first started in the business as salesman for the old Globe Film Exchange in Madison street, in the same building where the Pastime Theatre is now situated. Next he was salesman with Joe Hopp's Standard Film Exchange for nearly two years, after which he became assistant manager of the Majestic Film Exchange, owned by the Mutual Film Corporation. When Universal bought Hopp's exchange Flaherty was appointed manager and held the position for two and a half years. He then returned to Mutual as manager of the H. & H. branch, at 119 North Dearborn street, and after six months rejoined the Universal forces, remaining until he opened the Fousquare offices in Chicago and Minneapolis, managing both branches for one year.

As a parting shot after the interview Mr. Flaherty informed me that, on December 12, he had 100 solid, first-run days' bookings on the first release, on the $10, $20 and $30 plan, in the territory controlled by the Chicago office.

And my friend Flaherty, like all other exchangemen, always ties the bull outside when he aims at making a point!

Interesting Mutual Notes.

George W. Malone has been promoted to the management of the Milwaukee Mutual office, succeeding John A. Kemp, who will take charge of the Cincinnati office. Mr. Malone formerly ran picture shows in Escanaba, Mich., and Kenosha, Wis., and was also connected with road shows years ago. For the past year and a half Mr. Malone has been a film salesman in Minneapolis, Indiana and Illinois territory. Mr. Kemp made a fine record in Milwaukee and has the best wishes of many friends for his success in Cincinnati.

Hugh Rennie has been appointed manager of the Cleveland Mutual offices. He was formerly connected with the World Film Company in the Indianapolis, Minneapolis, Denver, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles offices, and was made western division manager for all territory west of the Mississippi. He was also manager of the Select offices in Denver for a year, and just before he signed up with Mutual in Cleveland, he handled the Hoffman Foursquare Pictures.

E. S. Rowley, one of the best known salesmen in Chicago, joined the Mutual forces last week. He has been connected with the General Film Company for six years.

Milwaukee's Part Closing Reduces Business One-Half

LAST week I chanced to meet M. Rice, owner of the States Theatre; J. C. Silliman, manager of the Liberty, Downer and Miramir Theatres, and Otto Andres, owner of the Grand Theatre, all of Milwaukee. They reported that a partial closing order had been issued in their city for theatres and for all public meeting places and business, except drug stores, groceries, and meat markets. The order took effect Wednesday, December 11. Only alternate rows of seats in theatres can be occupied by patrons, and children under fifteen years are barred altogether.

These exhibitors stated that quite a number of outlying towns were placed under the ban about the same time.

Mr. Rice and Mr. Silliman operate two theatres which are close together, and by a unique agreement they eliminate all contest for pictures of the same brand. They do this by running the pictures a week apart, Mr. Rice having the first showing. They report excellent business by this plan.

Mr. Silliman, who runs the picture the second week, gets the advantage from the billing done by his competitor the week previous, and he also gets the people who failed to see it during its first showing at the opposition house, more especially if it has made a hit. All the houses mentioned book regularly Select, Artcraft-Paramount, Metro and First National subjects, also other makes once in a while.

The Milwaukee partial closing order reduces theatre business by one half, which is a heavy burden; but exhibitors still believe that half a loaf is better than no bread.

Frazier Defends Himself Against Censorship Board

THE regular weekly meeting of the Censorship Commission was held at the usual hour, Friday, December 13, in the rooms of the judiciary committee, in the City Hall. During the proceedings Second Deputy Frazier and his chief censor, Mr. Prior, were invited to the meeting and were questioned at considerable length on their manner of arriving at decisions in the censorship of films. These discussions were quite heated at times, Censor Frazier defending his course against Chairman Hurley of the Commission and other members of that body.

Second Deputy Frazier held, and held rightly, that he was censoring films under the existing ordinance, but some of the women on the commission, who in the past have been firm adherents of Major Funkhouser, found fault with the Second Deputy, although he practically follows the course of his ousted predecessor.

Quite a number of interested people in the film business and others are taking exception to the Censorship Commission because it is going outside the purpose for which it was created. It was formed to discuss the censorship question from all angles and to report back to the judiciary committee recommendations for the drawing up of a new censorship ordinance which will take the place of the old one, the object being to render fairer service to the film business and greater satisfaction to the public.

Dan Donnellan a Benedict.

Dan Donnellan, manager of the Chicago office of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, surprised his many friends in the city by joining the ranks of the benedicts Tuesday evening, December 10. The bride was Miss Margaret M. Sutcliffe, of Minneapolis, who was Mr. Donnellan's stenographer while he was connected with the Minneapolis office of the Mutual. Mr. and Mrs. Donnellan are residing temporarily at the Grasmere Hotel, Sheridan Road, but will soon take up their residence on the south side of the city.

Mr. Donnellan took charge of the Chicago office October 20, this year, and has already made a host of friends among exhibitors and others in the trade.

"The Greatest Thing in Life" Great.

Griffith's picture, "The Greatest Thing in Life," had a most successful week's run recently at the Ziegfeld Theatre on Michigan avenue, and is now showing to crowded houses in other sections of Chicago. This pictured story has a tremendous grip and many see it for the second time. The war scenes are about the most realistic the writer has yet seen in any picture, and the acting of Lillian Gish and Robert Harron leave nothing to be desired.

Chicago Exchange Notes.

W. R. Scates has resigned as Chicago manager of Arteraft-Paramount and is now in New York. He has been succeeded by Fred F. Creswell, who was formerly sales manager of the Chicago office of Arteraft-Paramount.

Hunter Bennett, who in the past has held the position of special representative for the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation and the Mutual Film Corporation, has received an honorable discharge from military service and will leave for New York in the near future to form new business connections in the trade.

"A Bit of Heaven" Booked by Silee.

Lee Herz, president of the Silee Film Exchange, in the Consumers Building, this city, announces that he has closed with the Frieder Film Corporation, of Chicago, for the distribution of its picture, "A Bit of Heaven." This picture is based on the story of Kate Douglas Wiggin, "The Bird's Christmas Carol," and features Mary Louise. It is of five-reel length and was released December 16.

Mr. Herz also states that "Ashes of Love," which features James K. Hackett and Effie Shannon, is doing a fine business in Illinois, and that quite a number of exhibitors are repeating its booking.

"Under Four Flags."

"Under Four Flags," the third government official war film, has done so well at The Playhouse that its run has been extended to four weeks from the original two.

George Landy Returns to Select.

George Landy, who left Select's publicity department last spring for what he expected would be a through trip to Berlin, returned last week to his old stamping grounds. First assigned to Co. M of the Twenty-second Infantry, Landy was recommended within ten weeks to the Central Officers' Training School and earned his commission as a second lieutenant at the Camp Lee school. "Although I wasn't lucky enough to get into the real thing over there," says Landy, "the army has been a great training and an inspiration. But it feels fine to be back on the old job!"

Joe Lee Reports Progress.

Joe Lee, who is on his way to the coast in the interests of the Anita Stewart productions, writes from Minneapolis under date of December 15 that the Mayer plan of showing the first Anita Stewart production is producing great results.

STATE CENSORSHIP OR TAX UNLIKELY

New York Legislators Inclined to Let Sleeping Dogs Lie—Also Frown on Any Sunday Agitation

Albany, Dec. 12.

WITH the inauguration of the new Governor two weeks hence and with the Legislature convening which will carry with it a number of new faces, supplanting members who had been in the past more or less actively opposed to moving picture interests, talk is heard in various parts of the State Capitol these days as to what, if any, motion picture legislation will probably come up for consideration by the Senate and Assembly during the coming three months.

It is reasonably sure there will be no attempt to force the issue along censorship lines. That fact was clearly demonstrated a couple of years ago, when with the exception of a few it was the general consensus of opinion among the legislators of this State that the motion pictures being shown today needed no hand of censorship.

Since then the general run of pictures has shown in improvement to the extent that any talk of censorship for New York State will be regarded as little short of nonsensical. In the first place, Thaddeus Sweet, who will again lead the Assembly, does not believe there is any need for censorship in this State. His views will be backed by Senator Henry Walters, of Syracuse, who has always been a friend to the motion picture industry and who is a man of a broadminded type. As for the new Governor, he will join in the views of Speaker Sweet and Senator Walters. Anyone who knows "Al" Smith realizes that.

Doubtful if There Will Be State Tax.

It is extremely doubtful if any action will be taken during the session towards in some way imposing a footage tax on the motion picture business. There is no question in the minds of leaders in this State that the motion picture industry has accomplished a world of good in the recent conflict. They have, through the tax imposed by the Federal authorities, turned into the national treasury millions of dollars and through their own efforts have subscribed to almost as great an extent to the various funds and benevolences.

Practically the entire world, or those who keep abreast of the times, knows what wonderful work has been accomplished on the battlefields of France, not only by members of the moving picture industry in its various branches who enlisted in the service but also the vast amount of pleasure which has been brought to the soldiers by stars themselves, either in the way of personal entertainment or through the silent drama.

Sunday Pictures Question Unanswered.

And so there remains only the question of legalizing the Sunday picture throughout the State, a question which many of those in the business prefer to leave unanswered at the present time rather than to attempt forcing the issue. One case which has been hanging fire for several months will come up before the Court of Appeals for a decision in January.

The fight against legalizing Sunday movies in this State is well remembered by many. It died an ignominious death in committee at the closing of last year's session. Whether or not there will come some assemblyman or senator this year who will attempt its revival remains a question. Like the automobile industry, the motion picture business is annually selected by some assemblyman or senator as a means of self exploitation, through the introduction of a bill which has for its purpose what is generally termed "regulatory measures."

There is a feeling, however, about the Capitol these days, and one which will probably remain throughout the months to come, that the motion picture industry in this State is going along fairly well and that it is a good rule to follow of leaving well enough alone.

Legislators Oppose Sunday Agitation.

The majority of the larger cities in the State are now enjoying Sunday movies. Legislators, who went through the fight of the last two years, are frank in stating these days on their visits to the State Capitol that they can see no reason why it is necessary to bring up this question of Sunday movies at each and every session, a question which generally arouses considerable bitterness and which each year remains unsettled.

There is no legislator from a rural section who cares to court the disfavor of his constituents from the villages by supporting Sunday movies, and so with this in view it seems improbable at the present time that even with an almost certain decision on the part of the Court of Appeals there will be any great activity along the line of motion picture legislation between January and the close of the session in late April or early May.

There are motion picture people who are open in saying they believe that in Governor-elect Smith they will have a person more favorable to their interests than was Governor Whitman. And yet Governor Whitman's record shows that on more than one occasion he was a firm advocate of legislation and principles working in the betterment of the business.

C. L. GRANT.

John M. Quinn Named as Vitagraph Sales Manager

THE appointment of John M. Quinn as general manager of Vitagraph's sales organization was announced this week by Albert E. Smith, president of the joint Vitagraph distributing and producing organizations.

In looking about for a new chief executive for the selling organization, Mr. Smith made it a point to secure a man who combined in the highest degree an intimate knowledge of the producing end of the film industry as well as of the distributing and the exploitation branch of the business.

Mr. Quinn's appointment is due to a combination of both of these qualifications. For practically a year past Mr. Quinn has been closely associated with Mr. Smith at the main studio of the Vitagraph Company in Brooklyn, and he has thus gained a peculiar knowledge of the particular conditions and problems which Vitagraph must necessarily meet in the production of its pictures. This will stand him in good stead in directing his selling organization in their relations to exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada.

The new general manager is no stranger to Vitagraph, having first been associated with the Company in 1915, at which time he assisted in the exploitation of Vitagraph's first big serial, "The Goddess."

After the completion of this work Mr. Quinn joined the Triangle, and upon the retirement of David W. Griffith from the Fine Arts Studio in California Mr. Quinn assumed the post of general manager of that big western studio.

One Punch Not a Story Declares Fox Director

ALTHOUGH it is generally believed that three out of every five American writers are turning out scenarios of motion picture plays, Richard Stanton, the William Fox director, is skeptical. At least, he is inclined to believe that the ratio of persons writing worthwhile scenarios is about three out of 3,000,000. He arrived at this conclusion after reading upward of 200 scenarios without finding a story of the type he wanted. Mr. Stanton is looking for a real human, virile, smashing story, unhackneyed in theme, swift in the execution of its plot, and full of action and human drama.

"During the last two weeks," said Mr. Stanton, "I have read stories submitted by many well-known authors, have read many books and have searched every nook and corner for suitable plots; but have not been able to find the right kind. I am convinced there is a dearth of real scenarios.

"Each story I have read has something to commend it, however—some big punch. But that is all; authors seem to think they need only one big scene. What I want is action every minute—snap to every foot of film. A story must have such scenes throughout."

Scenario writers, continued the Fox Director, "apparently forget that a story must be human. A plain, straightaway story, with big scenes, real human interest, written to entertain, is very hard to find; but somewhere is an author who writes that kind of story.

Old Fox Manager Back from Army.

Honorably discharged from the army after having won a commission as second lieutenant, George F. Dembow, formerly managers of the Philadelphia exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, has returned to his former duties, succeeding Jack Levy, who has severed connection with the William Fox organization.

An incident of interest is that before the annual Fox convention in the Hotel Biltmore last June he suggested the name "Victory" for one of the William Fox groups of pictures inaugurated this season. This name was chosen. When the convention ended Dembow enlisted in the army.

Chadwick Heads F. I. L. M. Club.

The annual election of officers of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York took place on Wednesday, December 4. The following officers were elected: I. E. Chadwick, president; John Hammel, first vice-president; Joseph Klein, second vice-president; Sam Eckman, treasurer; Charles B. Hoy, secretary; George Schaefer, sergeant at arms.

"CHAPLIN? PAH! HE ISS NOT FONNY!"

Iss Sadt, With Troubles so Much I Should Die to Have, Says Smileless Winner of Griffith Tenspot

CHARLIE CHAPLIN? Pah! He iss not fonny. He iss sadt, with trouble so much what I should die to have." This is the opinion held by Mrs. Mary Veillette, 60 Frary avenue, Meriden, Conn., who won the prize of $10 offered by Walter Griffith, manager of the Poli Theatre, for anyone who could sit through "Shoulder Arms" without laughing.

The contest, announced in the local newspapers, succeeded splendidly as a publicity stunt for the comedy. Poli's Theatre was jammed at every performance, but brought no contestants until Tuesday, when Mrs. Veillette told him she had sat through the performance without laughing, or even smiling. Mr. Griffith was credulous and told her it would be necessary to have a witness to her superhuman feat.

Mrs. Veillette was determined to collect the prize. Mr. Griffith was skeptical, so the photoplay editor of the Meridan Daily Journal was asked to act as the referee for a repeat performance by Mrs. Veillette on Tuesday night. The local papers carried a big front page story to this effect in the home editions for that day and the house was fairly mobbed after the supper hour.

"Shoulder Arms" had competition during the first evening show. The crowds which succeeded in getting into the theatre divided their attention between the screen and Mrs. Veillette. The photoplay editor of the Daily Journal declared he did not take his gaze off her face while the Chaplin comedy was on the screen, and that she sat through it without emotion, excepting to register a slight indication of sadness when Doughboy Charlie robbed the dugout rat trap of its cheesy bait to get even with his Buddies who were enjoying boxes from home without sharing them with him.

The next day the winner of the prize went before a notary public and signed a statement to the effect that "Shoulder Arms" had not made her laugh. With this statement and the word of the motion picture editor of the newspaper that not once had Mrs. Veillette's face been wreathed in anything suggesting a smile, Mr. Griffith paid her the amount of the prize. And then came the miracle:

She smiled as she looked at the bill. Then she laughed. Then she said.

"But twice I saw the Chaplin films. Twenty dollars I should have as prizes because twice I did not do so much as laughing."

Mr. Griffith tried to explain that but one prize was offered. She departed, saying:

"Where there is something to laugh at, I laugh. I like same as anyone else something funny, but to Charlie Chaplin there is not something to laugh. He iss only in trouble always. Poor man!"

The result of Mrs. Veilletfes' second effort of sitting through the picture without laughing and the winning of the prize gave Poli's Theatre a two-column front page story in the local papers. It will be readily admitted that Manager Griffith received good action for his "sawbuck."

Mr. Griffith has booked "Shoulder Arms" for a repeat engagement, to meet the demand of local theatregoers who were unable to get in the theatre during the early part of the week.

The Other Side of the Shield.

Charlie Chaplin has done war relief work in France by proxy, according to a dispatch cabled from abroad by a representative of the Newspaper Enterprise Association. His capers on the screen at a movie show given by the Red Cross at a hospital near Vichy cured a soldier in the audience who, for some weeks, had been suffering from shell shock. Until Charlie ambled on to the screen the soldier had not been able to speak or laugh. He can now.

Cohen Adds Another House to His Fast Growing Chain

SYDNEY S. COHEN, president of the New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, added another theatre to his growing chain of moving picture houses last week, when he purchased the Tremont Theatre at 178th street and Webster avenue.

The Tremont is one of the largest theatres in the Bronx, seating more than a thousand persons and catering to a high class clientele. The theatre is being refurnished and remodeled throughout. Upon opening under Mr. Cohen's ownership it will present the highest grade of pictures, with atmospheric suggestions and musical programs in keeping with the most modern ideas in the exhibition of pictures.

By the acquisition of the Tremont Mr. Cohen now owns outright four large theatres in New York and has large holdings in other houses. The three others under his immediate control are the Empire and McKinley Square, also in the Bronx, and the North Star on Upper Fifth avenue. The first of these is one of the most spacious and attractive theatres in New York. It was designed by Mr. Cohen personally, and possesses all the appointments and advantages of fine downtown houses.

GOLDWYN FINISHES IT'S SECOND YEAR

Resume of Activities of Both Producing and Distributing Divisions—Personnel of Officers

THE holiday season finds the Goldwyn Pictures and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporations celebrating their second birthday—both expanding and prosperous. In the fall of 1916 Samuel Goldfish, then lately retired as chairman of the board of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, reached the decision to re-enter the industry on a larger and more ambitious scale than his beginnings, when he had formed and carried to a great measure of success the Jesse L. Lasky Company.

Into his new organization he invited Edgar and Archibald Selwyn—the Goldwyn trade name represents a merge of the "Gold" in Goldfish and "wyn" in Selwyn. The initial Goldwyn policy was to produce and release annually twenty-six productions. The stars of these productions were Mary Garden, Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Jane Cowl and Maxine Elliott. Long before the first year of Goldwyn had come to an end those who ruled the destinies of the organization had seen it attain important position in the industry.

The second releasing year began with an announced production of fifty pictures for the twelve months. The stars offered by the organization were and are Geraldine Farrar, the Rex Beach productions, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore.

Goldwyn has not existed for two years without mistakes, and it is characteristic of the company that it makes no effort to gloss over or excuse its errors of judgment, which have been kept down to a minimum.

Goldwyn has attained its productions and its distribution through a maximum of sincere, thoughtful effort on the part of its executive organization. Next in rank in the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to Mr. Goldfish comes Abraham Lehr, recently made a vice president and in charge of the company's California studios. Mr. Lehr is himself a fine example of the Goldwyn type of man and the elevation that awaits such men within the organization.

In the Goldwyn Distribution Corporation Alfred Weiss, one of the best known known figures in the film industry, and F. B. Warren, for many years a successful editor and publisher of newspapers in several of the country's larger cities, have been vice presidents from the day the company was organized. They have given every hour of their thought and effort to the creation of a distinctive, wholesome, unusual mechanism in which they have rewarded and advanced from the field the men who showed promise or achieved results for the company.

Meanwhile, in every country except the Teutonic nations and their allies, the Goldwyn productions are being shown under a splendidly developed world export organization. Arthur Ziehm is the manager of the Goldwyn export department.

In Great Britain the Goldwyn distribution is in affiliation with the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., owned by Oswald Stoll. In Australia the Goldwyn affiliation is the J. C. Williamson Film Company, Ltd.

Gabriel L. Hess is the other member of the Goldwyn executive family. He is the secretary and treasurer of Goldwyn as well as general counsel of the two Goldwyn organizations. He is a successful and popular member of the New York Bar.

The biggest step taken by Goldwyn in recent months was the decision to move all production work to California, where the big Triangle plant changed its name to the Goldwyn Studios, giving the company the finest of all producing studios in the industry. There, in association with Mr. Lehr, are Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's art director, and J. G. Hawks, one of the most successful scenario men in the industry.

Harry R. Durant remains in New York, where at this time he devotes the greater part of his work to discovering and purchasing literary material.

Goldwyn publicity, which has had much to do with the advancement of the company because of its soundness and freedom from fakeries and absurdities, is in charge of Dwight S. Perrin, director of publicity. Louis Sherwin is general press representative in charge of magazine promotion. Mr. Perrin is a well known newspaper man of long experience and was the first editor of the New York Tribune's graphic section. Mr. Sherwin was for eight years the dramatic critic of the New York Globe. On the Pacific Coast Norbert Lusk, detailed from the home office organization, is in charge of publicity and exhibitor exploitation.

One of the most carefully developed departments of Goldwyn is its Exhibitor Service Department, in charge of Hunt Stromberg, a young St. Louis advertising agency man.

Goldwyn Signs Rogers and Screen Is Winner

WILL ROGERS, famous star of Ziegfeld's "Follies," who scored a nation-wide personal triumph in Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," recently released by Goldwyn, is the latest addition to Goldwyn's group of celebrated personalities.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, placed Rogers under contract during his visit in Cleveland en route to the Coast. The noted cowboy wit and lariat-thrower will be starred in original dramas selected or written for him by Goldwyn authors.

Goldwyn has been negotiating with Will Rogers ever since "Laughing Bill Hyde" was released, because his personal success was so instantaneous and unquestionable that there could be no doubt of his future in the cinema.

The stories to be provided for Will Rogers will be big, gripping, human dramas. Following the expiration of his contract with Flo Ziegfeld, Rogers will move his family to Culver City.

Vincent Making Patriotic Film.

A patriotic feature, which has the indorsement of Director Charles S. Hart, of the Government Division of Films, is being rapidly completed by James Vincent. Himself an important member of the Film Division and a well known director, Mr. Vincent is translating to the screen one of the most inspiring books produced by the war—James Mott Hallowell's "The Spirit of Lafayette."

Mr. Vincent has been associated with the film business for many years. He started with the Kalem company in 1908, rose rapidly as a director, and, besides having made several special features, has gained prominence through his work for many of the large organizations, including Fox and Pathe. Announcement of the cast and method of release will be made later. The scenario is by J. Searle Dawley.

By Ghosh? No! Says District Court Judge

PRINCE SARATH GHOSH has become convinced that the United States District Court is no place for the entertainment of personages of royal birth as the result of the polite but positive dismissal of the suit which he instituted some time ago against the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The Prince wrote a series of six short stories which were published in Pearson's Magazine and he complained that the film company appropriated the theme of his literary efforts in producing photoplays, but Judge Augustus N. Hand voiced the opinion that the theme of the stories was as "old as literature and as ineradicable as human emotions."

The screen productions on the other hand presented extremely modern ideas applicable to present day social and economic problems, Judge Hand concluded, and as the Prince failed to even establish a legal copyright title he was left out in the cold, figuratively speaking, and hence his painful conclusions apropos of our courts.

Lehrer Becomes Select Salesman.

Al Lehrer, who is known in film circles as "Smiling Al" is about to realize his desire of years to become a film salesman. For the last two years Mr. Lehrer has been in charge of the film department of Select's New York Exchange, while previously he held the same position with the World. In his work as head of the film department he has become acquainted with hundreds of New York exhibitors, and for a long time he has entertained the belief that he could make good as a salesman. Several months ago Branch Manager Siegel promised him the next opening, and this week he fulfilled the promise.

Censors Visit Vitagraph Plant.

Henry W. Lewis, chief inspector of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors and the chief clerk of the board, Charles E. Bell, visited the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn, Friday, December 6. Mr. Lewis and Mr. Bell went through the plant, met the heads of the various departments, the Vitagraph players who were at work and watched Corinne Griffith and Gladys Leslie working in two of the studios.

Harris Joins Outing-Chester.

Raymond S. Harris, special representative of the Committee on Public Information, Division of Films, has resigned to become sales manager of the Outing-Chester Film Company, Inc., producers of the Outing-Chester "camera adventures." Mr. Harris had charge of the official presentations of Government war pictures in many cities.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

OPPORTUNITY was not given us last week to express our individual disapproval of the resolution presented to the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress by the committee representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry condemning the motion picture activities of the Committee on Public Information through its Division of Films. In the meantime a protest has been issued by the Acting Manager of the Division of Films which effectually disposes of that resolution. It will be found elsewhere in this issue.

The work of the Division of Films is too well known to readers of this publication to need either explanation or apology. It was essentially a war measure and, in the nature of things, ended with the war. In no sense could its work be considered as competitive with the motion picture industry of America, nor did it enter into competition with any single factor of that industry. The task undertaken by the Division of Films could not have been prosecuted with efficiency by the American film industry, singly or collectively. By every rule of warfare the picturing of the activities of the United States in war must have been, as it was, under strictest military control. And what happened: the American public has been given the finest pictorial story of this country's war activities that could be conceived; a record that is complete in every particular and superior to anything that has been done by any other nation similarly engaged. These pictures—three multiple reel features, one one-part serial and numerous contributions to existing weekly single reels—have been distributed to the motion picture theatres without disarranging existing trade conditions or depriving the commercial film companies of a legitimate profit for their services.

In view of these indisputable facts, known to every man in the motion picture business, the resolution which suggested that the Government's film activities had interfered with the usual trend of our business was unfounded in practice and untrue in conclusion. We do not believe that it represents the opinion of the majority.

THE purpose of President Schaefer of the exhibitors' national organization to form a really substantial organization of that branch of the motion picture business is entitled to sincere consideration by all exhibitors. It is now time to lay aside all prejudices and get together on a definite program. The unit is the state organization, so that is where the start should be made. In each state there is work to be done. A beginning cannot be made too soon. A few states have going organizations, but the greater number have nothing. What are you doing in your state? Why not begin now?

FROM the story of the talk given by a house manager from the "wild and woolly" to the members of the "Almighty Press Agents" at their weekly luncheon the other day, the aforesaid press agents heard something. The story was issued by the organization and will be found elsewhere in this issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and, while it does not include some of the spicy repartee, it is sufficient. That the members of the A. M. P. A. should be willing to publish so frank a report of the event is to their credit, since it indicates that they are open to conviction and willing to learn. Eventually, we hope, a distinction will be discovered between advertising aids and plain "bull."

LEGISLATURES in many states will convene in January to engage in the work of lawmaking. It is almost a certainty that proposals will be made quite generally to force Sunday closing laws upon the statute books of those states which do not already have them. To combat this situation, which is almost certain to come up, there must be immediate action upon the part of exhibitors everywhere. With this necessity the work of organization ought to receive sufficient impetus to put it over in every state that does not possess some kind of unity among the exhibitors within its borders. Ohio has already started the ball rolling; New Jersey exhibitors are also on the war path and will have their own bill favoring Sunday opening. The movement should be followed up all along the line.

VALUE OF AN OPEN MIND

By Edward Weitzel.

IT is doubtful if any piece of moving picture fiction ever received more enthusiastic support from the trade papers and the New York dailies than that elicited by "The Common Cause," at its press showing this month. The one big fact that impressed itself on every one present was the bounteous entertaining qualities of the Blackton production. With a theme broad enough to interest all grades of spectators, irrespective of its war atmosphere, the serious motive of the story is held down to the right proportion by a blend of vigorous but unforced humor. All the necessary elements to catch the sympathy and win the approval of practically the entire screen public are to be found in the picture. Loyalty to country and the cause of the Allies, courage, reparation—the tale of three human beings who find their souls as a reward for doing their duty to humanity—are mingled skillfully with frequent scenes of genuine comedy born of the characters and situations that are the logical development of the plot.

The admiration of the French soldier for his wounded chum, the British Tommy, and the fierce but amusing rivalry of the two for the favor of a vivacious little waitress is a comedy motive that is rich in humor and the source of irresistible laughter. The fun is so compelling and it has been developed with such adroitness that it becomes of more importance than ordinary comedy relief. And it is necessary to go back to the spoken drama to find a fitting comparison to the method employed in the picture's construction.

The Skill of the Dramatist Is Still Supreme.

"The Common Cause" does not come by its kinship to the stage play by accident, but by design. Written by J. Hartley Manners and Ian Hay Beith, it was originally a spoken drama and was put together by men of the theatre, who knew the rules of their profession. And it evoked precisely the same response from the audiences in the playhouse that it received from the spectators who saw the screen version. It owes the breadth and the pull of its appeal quite as much to the manner of its making as to the matter of which it is made.

For over two thousand years mankind has been interested in the art of the dramatist. The greatest mind the world has ever known was a practical playwright. Lesser men, like Moliere and Ibsen, were practical playwrights. They understood how to reach a body of spectators as if it were one man. That is the business of the dramatist. He does not write to be read in the library, and the book thrown aside at the whim of the reader. He writes because he hopes to be acted, and unless he understands the craftsmanship of his profession he is doomed to failure.

How to hold the attention of a multitude, of three hundred or a thousand men and women of different temperaments and grades of mentality, is the practical side of the playwright's art that must be mastered if he is ever to realize his ambition. This important detail was solved centuries ago and has been passed on from generation to generation. Men of the theatre understand it today and we have writers for the screen who know how the trick is done. But they are few in number. Some of the directors, also, realize their duty in the matter. A wider knowledge of the laws that have kept the spoken drama alive since its birth and practical experience in applying these laws will develop a class of screen playwrights of which there is very great need. The screen novelist has his uses. He will become more useful when he advances to the position of screen dramatist.

Ignorance and prejudice are bad advisers. If J. Stuart Blackton had harkened to the cry against adapting stage drama to the screen that is the favorite occupation of those who have never devoted any honest thought to the subject, the followers of the moving picture would have been deprived of the excellent entertainment offered by "The Common Cause."

BULLETS AND WOUNDS

By Robert C. McElravy.

THE oft-quoted line, "He jests at scars who never felt a wound," might have been written of certain performers in moving pictures. There is beyond doubt a great deal of truth in the criticisms which appear from time to time of the ineffective manner in which fire-arms are employed on the screen. Within one week recently we saw two dramatic or melodramatic offerings, whichever they were intended to be, in which the heroine fired point blank at the hero, by mistake. In both instances the hero fell to the ground, lay there a few moments in a stunned condition, and presently got up rubbing his head, but apparently unharmed. In neither instance was there the slightest effort to stick to the probabilities, which were of course instant death for the hero in each case, or at least a long term in a hospital.

The ridiculous and deliberate misuse of weapons is a constant source of irritation to screen patrons. The practice is excusable, though perhaps greatly overdone, in knockout comedies, but it weakens some otherwise strong dramatic productions tremendously. It has been carried to such an absurd extent that it not only weakens the productions in which it occurs, but has a tendency to harm legitimate dramas as well. The mere sight of a revolver or automatic pistol in the hands of a performer should carry something of a thrill of apprehension to the observer, but in how many instances does it really have this effect? Very few, we fear, for the experienced screengoer has been fooled so many times that the sight creates but a faint stir of emotion within him.

Speaking in all seriousness, would it not pay directors to enter into an armistice and "demobilize" their acting forces for a time at least? The use of weapons in pictures has been so abused that the dramatic value of situations in which they appear has been greatly vitiated. Actors in many instances have come to the point of letting the gun do all of the work, and the appearance of a weapon often destroys rather than creates drama.

In many states, perhaps a majority of them now, there are laws prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons. The penalties for the violation of these laws are so great that few people feel free to "tote a gun" any more. It would seem that for the mere sake of verisimilitude in modern stories the screen should restrict the practice to duly authorized officers of the law, as in real life. It certainly does not seem proper that the hero and heroine and others in the cast, without such authority, should go about carrying weapons.

There are of course many productions which absolutely demand the use of fire-arms—border dramas, gambling house stories and the like. Most of these yarns are dated back to the days when packing a gun was not a legal offense, but in present times there is not much excuse for it. What do people do in these days under stress of high emotions when there are no guns to be had. If scenario writers will look this question over and devise some answer to it in their next stories, we might find some new work for actors and fresh situations for the screen. Merely to make an attempt to get a story across without a gun in it would be a fine bid for originality, and well worth trying.

But if there must be guns in stories, let us learn to treat the effect of them on the screen in a legitimate manner. A bullet wound is a serious matter, and in so picturing it we may at least restore to a certain extent the tragic or dramatic character of such an infliction.

PREJUDICE DOESN'T EXIST

LOOKING through a recent copy of the Bioscope, a film trade paper published in London, we came across an article headed thusly: "Britain's Opportunity—America's Film Productivity Likely to be Reduced by 50 Per Cent.—Why Should not the British Producer Make Up the Shortage?" Then we read on to discover the basis for the yarn. We discovered that the War Industries Committee were engaged upon scheduling legislation which should have as its object the reduction of American film product by one half and that the activity of the War Industries Committee was the outcome of representations made by George Kleine, who said that the supply was in excess of the demand.

We are sure that Mr. Kleine will feel flattered in being taken so seriously by our contemporary across the pond, since, up to now, no one here has credited him with such profound knowledge of motion picture conditions in this country. A case of a prophet not without honor, except in his own country.

But the war is over and the War Industries Committee is in the scrap heap from which there is no hope of conservation, so that, the wish of The Bioscope that British producers might make up the deficit which the War Industries Committee was expected to create will not materialize.

The main question still exists: Why cannot British producers sell pictures in America?

It has been suggested by Britons that there existed a prejudice against British pictures because they were British; that we ought to lay aside that prejudice and take their pictures as they take ours—frequently and liberally.

Our friends of the trade in Britain are barking up the wrong tree. There never has been any prejudice in this country against British films as such. When a picture made in England that had merit and appealed to the tastes of our public it has been successful. But that success, whatever its measure might have been, was gained solely through the merit of the picture itself. By that statement we mean that there never has been a time when a British picture had back of it the selling power of its producer.

Contrast the methods Americans adopt to sell pictures in Great Britain to those British makers follow in this country. In the item of publicity alone eighty per cent. of the advertising in British trade papers is for American productions. When do you see a like effort or a fraction of it put forth to sell a British film here?

Marketing films in this country is a business of which trade paper advertising is not more than five per cent. of the expense. An organization of competent salesmen and publicity men are required to put even the best pictures over.

If British producers will loosen up and get into the game of selling film here as it is sold by American producers they will find the market receptive to their product.

The American market is very responsive to proper promotion, but this is a competitive market and in all business transactions here friendship ceases to be a controlling factor.

THEATRES AND PURE AIR

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WE need not feel sorry for ourselves that we have lost a large amount of money through the general closing of theatres unless we realize that it was to have been expected and that it may be remedied in the future. The thing to do is to purge ourselves of those conditions which contribute to epidemics of disease, get ready to meet situations which may come up again sooner than we anticipate, and profit by our losses during the period of influenza by giving more attention to instructions from health departments in great centres of population.

Our people usually like to have a good time.

Most of them want to live right.

To reconcile these simply use plain facts.

"About the theatres," says Dr. Royal Copeland, New York Health Commissioner, "I never had any doubt about the sanitary ones. The only question of infection was in relation to the hole-in-the-wall moving picture shows. Some of these had no direct doors and windows opening into the air. Sometimes their artificial ventilation systems were defective or not operating. Such places were breeding grounds for the disease.

His remarks are intended for limited application.

Certain theatres are marked for future inspection.

But the entire industry is seriously affected.

Health departments, bureaus of licenses and the police have their eyes on incompetent exhibitors, but the public is not so discriminating. Future losses from a general closing on account of such places can be avoided, but injury has been done exhibitors who co-operated with the health authorities and to moving picture shows as a whole. It is not enough that all should have a knowledge of sanitary principles—they should be more widely and intelligently utilized.

This is in common fairness to all exhibitors.

A few incompetents can do large and widespread injury.

The whole game is a big one, so tremendous that it can only reach a development in proportion to its importance through scrupulous honesty in all of its departments, of production, of distribution, of exhibition, through that marvelous combination of effort which brings success to all large affairs, team work. There should be no place in our unity of purpose to improve for those incompetents whose individual selfishness and small greed can undermine and seriously injure the entire structure.

It is obvious that we should keep our bodies healthy.

Clean red blood has much to do with happiness.

Why poison it at public gatherings with foul air?

Why smother one great source of enjoyment in a place supposed to be devoted to our entertainment, particularly when the facts of ventilation and its systems are widely and commonly known? There are thousands of intelligent and high-minded exhibitors taking pains to be in accord with health principles and supporting the authorities besides, but the way to more firmly establish public confidence in their orderly places is to help eliminate the incompetent and unfit, who act as drag anchors on the common progress. With sanitary rules generally enforced and respected the closing of theatres in time of epidemic would not again occur.

There is more at stake than sound business principle.

We are emerging from old conditions into new ones.

The health of our manhood is a war lesson.

This lesson is deeply planted in the American mind.

Physical slackers do not belong to these times.

With manhood meaning mental vigor and physical strength, motherhood a new happiness under finer conditions, as well as a sacred duty, childhood a time of flowering made more vital by evenly-balanced training, all to our individual advantage and to our greatness as a nation, it is just as well to give heed to sanitary regulations for picture shows and treat the question as seriously as we have done that of political liberty and world enlightenment.

EXHIBITORS RESENT LOCALIZATION MOVE

Meeting of New Minneapolis Organization Thrown Into Disorder by Motion to Restrict Activities

A FACTIONAL fight between two clans of Minneapolis moving picture men developed a rather sensational aspect when the Theatrical Protective League, a new organization formed by thirty Minneapolis exhibitors, was made permanent at a meeting in the West Hotel, Minneapolis, Thursday, December 12.

Warm enthusiasm was evinced in the new movement at the outset of the meeting, over which W. A. Steffes, a prominent Minneapolis exhibitor, acting as chairman, presided. All went well until W. H. Deeth made a motion to amend the by-laws to restrict the activities of the new organization to purely local affairs. A demonstration of wild disorder followed, and it was with difficulty that the chairman restored order. By a vote of 16 to 14 Mr. Deeth's motion to make the new organization a local one was lost.

Those of the old organization who were unfavorable to the proposed plan of operation taking in exhibitors from points tributary to Minneapolis filed out in high dudgeon, with the exception of Dan Eselin, treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest and also elected to a place on the executive board of the new organization.

As soon as the by-laws had been accepted making the organization permanent, the acting chairman declared all offices vacant, and T. E. Mortenson, editor of Amusements, was requested to act as temporary chairman. He called the meeting and ordered the election of officers to proceed.

Bohlig Makes Nomination Speech.

S. I. Bohlig of the Emerson Theatre, who made the nomination speech, moved that the men who had previously been elected temporary officers be unanimously elected to the same offices permanently.

Request was made by Mr. Steffes, who had acted as temporary president during the formation of the new organization, that Mr. Bohlig withdraw his motion, suggesting that before making any further nominations those present take into consideration the advisability of placing the temporary officers back in office.

He discussed in detail the agitation against himself as president of the organization by members of the older league and stated that for the sake of harmony he would much prefer to see some one else placed at the head of the new body, "some one who would be acceptable to the bolters."

He related how some of the exhibitors had told of being approached by other exhibitors and exchange men regarding himself as the head of the new organization. He reported the activities of a committee which had been appointed to call on the officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest and ask them to resign, hold a new election of officers and merge the two organizations into one. The purpose, he said, was to bring about harmony and insure a strong organization.

The officers of the old league, he said, agreed to resign if he, Steffes, would resign and promise not to run for office again. This, said Mr. Steffes, he was willing to do, with the provision that the officers of the old league do likewise. Mr. Steffes cited the report of the committee that the officers refused to consider the proposition in that light. "In view of these facts," he said, "there's only one thing to do and that is go ahead with the new organization and make it a success."

Steffes Elected President.

Mr. Bohlig, who made the original motion to return the temporary officers, then withdrew his motion and dramatically moved that Mr. Steffes be elected president by acclamation. A wild tumult followed and there was no evidence of a dissenting vote. Mr. Steffes took the chair in the midst of a great demonstration.

Those who served with Mr. Steffes as temporary officers were re-elected. They were: Vice-president, Jack Martin; secretary, John Bergstrom, and treasurer, George Carisch. The following were elected on the board of directors: Dan Eselin, Max Wittles, Ed Hinz, S. G. Bohlig and Mr. Dedman.

The articles of the constitution state that the purposes of the organization are "to secure protection by co-operation, to raise the standard of motion picture films and the motion picture business generally, to secure fair and equitable treatment from all with whom we have business transactions, to prevent breaches of contracts of whatsoever nature, to secure reasonable insurance rates, to secure protection against adverse legislation, to adjust difficulties with labor, to promote the spirit of good fellowship in all lines of the business, to adjust minor matters of importance to the exhibitor, and to further the best interests of the League and the public in general in all matters pertaining to the exhibitors' business."

Edna Gladys Brown Dead After a Brief Illness

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week of the death of Miss Edna Gladys Brown, who succumbed to pneumonia on December 12 after a brief illness. The deceased has been connected with the motion picture business for more than ten years, beginning in 1907 as assistant to Joseph R. Miles, who was cashier of Miles Brothers. Later she was cashier of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company and occupied a similar position with the Film Supply Company, formed after the Sales Company was abandoned.

When the Film Supply Company dissolved she became one of the active directors of the Exclusive Supply Company, and finally, with Joseph Miles, assisted in the formation of the Lloyds Film Storage and continued in the management of that concern up to the time of her death.

Miss Brown was probably as well informed in matters relating to motion pictures and the trade generally as any engaged in that business. Possessed of a charming disposition she made many friends who will mourn her demise.

The funeral services were held at the Funeral Church, Broadway and Sixty-seventh street, New York, on Saturday evening, December 14, and were attended by many members of the motion picture trade.

MADGE KENNEDY: HER DAY DREAMS

Goldwyn Star Gives the History of the Wise Little Goosegirl and the Splendid White Knight, Born of Imagination, Who Becomes Flesh and Blood Reality

By Edward Weitzel

GOING after an interview has always something of the nature of an adventure. No matter how often a star has been seen on the screen, the element of the unknown predominates when he or she is met, face to face, for the first time. No amount of experience ever dulls the edge of the curiosity which is felt toward every prominent personality on the shadow stage, and a ten or fifteen minutes wait before an interview opens is usually spent in wondering whether the subject is going to make "good copy." Madge Kennedy promised something out of the conventional. Her stage career had been unique and she is repeating a similar success in pictures. The young woman who had been selected to create the demure heroine of "Twin Beds" and whose charming artlessness seemed but the reflection of her real nature, has made an undisputed place for herself in the theatrical world. It should prove interesting to learn how she liked playing parts of this sort, and if her ambition was directed to characters of a different type.

The telephone message from the Goldwyn office, making the appointment, conveyed the information that the interview would be limited, as Miss Kennedy must leave the hotel promptly at 12 o'clock in order to catch a train for Los Angeles. It was 11.35 when she walked into the parlor of the St. Regis, dressed for traveling.

Talking Over the New Picture.

"I am sorry I can give you only twenty-five minutes, but we have just finished packing and the taxi has been ordered for 12," was the remark which following the greeting by the able representative of "A Perfect Lady." "Now, what have you come to talk about?"

"Nothing at all; I've come to listen to you. The readers of the Moving Picture World want to hear about you and your new photoplay. It is to be called 'Day Dreams,' I understand."

One of the whimsical looks that are so familiar to Madge Kennedy's screen admirers showed on her face, as she replied:

"Yes. Dreams and nightmares and sleep and double beds and twin beds are always getting themselves into the parts I have to play. Day dreams should come quite naturally to me."

"What is your part—another of those innocent-eyed heroines who fracture the laws of propriety with the unconscious indifference of a kitten playing with the knitting?"

"Oh, no! I'm as proper as proper can be all through this picture. You see, I'm a wise little goosegirl, whose wisdom consists in having ideals and believing in a splendid white knight who will one day carry her off to his enchanted castle. And the little goosegirl's dream comes true. It's a modern story, and the heroine's name is Primrose. She has been reared on her grandparents' farm and knows more about bringing up geese and ducks than being waited upon and flirted with by experienced lady-killers. But she holds to her faith, and the way the flowering of her romance is brought about in this prosaic age is novel and interesting."

"You prefer a character of this kind, perhaps, to one of the queens of polite farce you have so often impersonated?"

"Yes, indeed!" Madge Kennedy exclaimed earnestly. "I love to make people laugh, but I want to make them feel deeply, also, to help them understand something of the beauty of life. I shall never want to play weepy heroines, and I hope to keep on with the characters that help people to feel light-hearted and to throw off their worries. Only, I'd like to be able, somewhere in the story, to show that the girl I am acting is strong and fine of nature and capable of true feeling and deep sympathy. My little goosegirl is like that, in spite of her day dreams and her ignorance of the world."

Praise for a Brother Professional.

At this juncture Madge Kennedy's maid appeared in the doorway and looked in anxiously.

"Have the trunks gone?" asked her mistress.

"Yes'm—and the taxicab is waiting."

"We'll leave in ten minutes."

It was evident the maid was not at all easy in her mind as she turned away, so the interviewer reached for his headgear.

"Don't go!" exclaimed the actress who has had so many stage and screen honeymoons during her short professional career. "I promised you my time until 12 o'clock, and I'm going to keep my word. And I must tell you about one of the geese we used in the picture. He is the leader of the flock that supported Geraldine Farrar at the Metropolitan Opera House, and a wise old bird, in every sense of the word. I was given his reputation for being a thorough artist and a gentleman both on and off the stage, but my awe of him had a strong admixture of fear. This is the reason.

I still retain a mental picture of a greatly terrified small girl headed for home and mother and hotly pursued by a gentleman goose with outstretched wings who had been disturbed while taking the ladies of his family for a walk down a country road. I had heard of the powerful blow a gander can strike with his wings, so I ran and screamed with all my might when the flock turned and hissed at me. We were stopping at a farmhouse for the summer and my mother had the gate open by the time I reached it. I was only five years old when this happened, but I would not acknowledge the geese had frightened me. I had taken off my shoes and stockings and was carrying them under my arms when attacked.

"'What made you run, if you were not afraid?' I was asked. And between sobs I replied: 'I didn't want the old goose to steal my shoes.'"

"With this recollection still in your mind," Miss Kennedy, "no wonder you hesitated over trusting yourself too near the leader of the Metropolitan flock.

The star of "Day Dreams" assumed an air of comic terror.

"Why, you may not believe it, but the first time I started to rehearse a scene with that feathered Brigham Young I felt the way a stunt performer must feel just before doing a leap for life over a high cliff; and it was several days before I conquered my fear of the bird sufficiently to go through the business given us. But, I did that accomplished actor a great wrong; he never failed to show me every professional courtesy and to conduct himself like a perfect gentleman."

Madge Kennedy in "Day Dreams" (Goldwyn).

"And he never tried to steal your shoes?"

"Not even one of them."

A clock on the mantel started to chime the noon hour, and once more the anxious appearing maid stood in the doorway. Madge Kennedy rose and held out her hand. A moment or so later she waved good-bye through the window of the taxi. As the cab turned the corner the interviewer realized he had forgotten to ask a most important question. Nothing had been said about California and what the latest Goldwyn star to leave for the Coast thought of her coming journey to the land that moving picture has taken for its own.

SOME SQUARE PLUGS IN ROUND HOLES

By FLOYD BROWN,

Manager First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange, Indianapolis, and Director Motion Picture Division The H. Lieber Company.

SHOULD we meet a man somewhere in the vicinity of the equator attempting to dispose of a stock of ear muffs our hearts would go out to him in pity, but when we come in contact with a man in the motion picture business trying to sell amusement merchandise on a plan equally ridiculous it causes our sympathetic heart to do the double shuffle and resolve into something bordering on derision.

Some prophet of the dim and distant past, whose foresight was as good as his hindsight, warned the world with "Know Thyself." The admonition to the business world today is "Know Thy Market." It is just as essential for the exhibitor to know his market, by knowing his community, as it is for the exporter to keep his finger on the pulse of Paris, Peru or Polynesia.

The great big vital problem, the bomb that causes the roo'kies and frequently the veterans of the industry to suffer from shell-shock, is the fact that the gentle public is always about two leaps ahead of the producer and exhibitor.

The public's mood and taste is in a state of constant change and evolution. The greatest danger the exhibitor has to meet is his failure to analyze conditions as they exist. If he fails to anticipate the future or even the current moods of the public, allowing tradition or past occurrences to be his guide, he is likely to find himself in the position of the boy who was late at school because, as he explained, every time he took a step forward he slipped back two. To the teacher's query as to how he finally arrived, he answered that he turned around and started back home. The exhibitor who finds himself in a similar predicament has only to emulate the boy by reversing the gears of his thought machine.

Many exhibitors are not in sympathy with their own business. They lack the natural imaginative and dramatic instinct so essential to its successful conduct and frequently attribute their failure to the wrong causes.

The commandments inscribed on the tables of stone of the amusement world are as much ignored and as often misinterpreted as the well known ten placed on Mount Sinai for the guidance of mankind, and the Billy Sundays of the business can boast of few converts.

Some whose enthusiasm overlaps their reasoning power think because they recently mopped up with a war picture that they should give their patrons nothing but war pictures. Cinema nausea results, and it may require several applications of common sense liniment to restore the box office to normal respiration.

Again there are those who place an arbitrary limit on the price they will pay for a program, which in effect limits their own possibilities. There is just about as much logic contained in the policy this class pursues with such dogmatic persistency as is shown by the fellow who is a republican because his father was.

Film value is not measured by its cost, but by box office statements. The only expensive film is the one that costs little and accordingly brings little.

The big production, the one that holds the magic power of appeal and the welcome element of gratification, is not the one that reduces the exhibitor's profit by virtue of its cost. It is the uninteresting rehash of worn out themes, cheaply produced and poorly enacted, sold as a feature on the flmsy excuse that it is in five or more reels, which proves the burden to the bank roll.

The million dollar a year star is not the millstone around the exhibitor's neck. It is the hundred dollar a week player whose box office power is nil that puts the red ink on the ledger.

A million dollars a year may seem an abnormal salary for an individual, but it must be remembered that the public regards a motion picture star as a superhuman being endowed with supernatural powers.

Charge Lasso Misleads Exhibitors and Public

THE Lasso Pictures Company is made defendant in a complaint issued against it by the Federal Trade Commission, which states that it has reason to believe the company has been using unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce. From a preliminary investigation made by the commission it was found "that within the year last the respondent, the Lasso Pictures Company, with the purpose, intent and effect of stifling and suppressing competition in the motion picture industry in interstate commerce has secured certain motion picture films which have been exhibited and displayed to the public by motion picture exhibitors prior to the date respondent secured same, and that respondent changes the title and names of said motion picture films, sells, leases and offers for sale such old films for exhibition under new names and titles as new and original motion picture films; that the exhibiting of such renamed and retitled pictures as aforesaid is calculated and designed to and does defraud and deceive the exhibitors and general public, and mislead them into the belief that said picture films are new and original and were never before exhibited or produced."

Notice has been given the company that the charges of the complaint above outlined will be heard by the Federal Trade Commission at its office, Fifteenth and K streets, Northwest, Washington, January 17, 1919, or as soon thereafter as the case may be reached, at which time and place the company is directed to appear and show cause why an order should not be entered by the Commission requiring it to cease and desist from the violation of law charged in the complaint. The company is required to file its answer within thirty days after service of this complaint, the date of which is December 2.

Big Penalty for Exhibitors Making False Tax Returns

A new pronounciamento covering the penalties that will attach in the case of failure to make proper returns under the seating capacity tax provisions of the revenue laws has just come from the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Treasury Department some time ago announced that it was going to use every effort to see to it that the motion picture theatre owners, in common with all other taxpayers, turned in to the Government all that was due it under the provisions of the law.

It has been whispered about that some of the theatre owners, in stating the capacity of their houses for the purpose of paying the tax, fail to put down the exact number of seats and in this way secure the advantages of a lower tax rate. In doing so these exhibitors make themselves liable to a rather heavy penalty. The text of Commissioner Roper's new ruling is as follows:

Where the proprietor of a theatre makes return of special tax within the time required by law but shows its seating capacity to be smaller than it actually is, thereby indicating liability to tax at a rate lower than that to which he is in fact liable, the 50 per cent. penalty does not attach to a later payment covering the same period at the proper rate. However, if the first return was fraudulent, liability to the 100 per cent. penalty will be regarded as incurred. The same rule applies where liability to tax at a rate lower than that to which the taxpayer is actually liable is indicated by misstatement of the population of the place in which the theatre is located.

When, after payment of special tax at a certain rate the seating capacity of a theatre is increased beyond that which the tax previously paid is sufficient to cover, tax at a higher rate must be paid covering the period beginning with the first day of the month in which the seating capacity is increased and ending June 30, following. If a return disclosing the new liability is not made during the month in which the change takes place, liability to a penalty of 50 per cent. of the new tax is incurred. The payment of tax at the higher rate does not entitle the taxpayer to refund of any part of the amount first paid.

Motion Picture Educator

What Will the Film Producer Do Toward Meeting Educational Demands of Future

IT has seemed to many of us that the producer has used short sighted methods in dealing with what now promises to become one of the biggest assets of the screen, the educational film. In his eagerness to serve public taste he has concentrated all his efforts of salesmanship on the film of entertaining characteristics, and has left the educational aspect of the situation to take care of itself.

That this should have been the case inasmuch as there appeared on the surface of things no ready market for a class of film which served chiefly to educate, is not at all singular. And inasmuch as schools and other educational institutions desiring to make use of the moving picture looked for something for nothing by force of a circumstance for which the boards of finance were chiefly responsible, it was difficult for the producer to bring himself to a frame of mind which justified a concentrative effort on something that promised an insufficient financial return.

With one or two exceptions the educational department of the producer's ware rooms has lacked the necessary elements of salesmanship. There has been little or no effort made to advertise films of an educational nature in a manner that would reach the ultimate consumer which is undoubtedly the educational institution. And there has been only the weakest kind of an effort made to preserve in usable shape the vast collection of educational pictures which the industry has turned out in the last ten to twelve years.

During this period extensive libraries of films have been collected, have been tried out in a way, and have finally been dissolved and disseminated to different parts of the earth; and many of their members have dropped into oblivion. What were left after the dismemberment have frequently been redressed, reassembled and converted if possible into brief bits of theatre entertainment to be used as "fillers." In the majority of cases these have been travel or zoological subjects, and the educational film in a truly educational aspect for the time ceased to be.

This term of hibernation we have reason to believe is over. The great war has come and gone; and out of its ruins has arisen a spectre which is rapidly being transformed into a vastly real and material thing. This "thing" is a universal appreciation of the uses to which the moving picture film can be put apart from its theatrical attributes.

The tremendous possibilities of the screen in every walk of education, in every branch of science is no longer a supposition. The idea is about to evolve itself into a demand. The majority of educational institutions throughout the country are already equipped with projection machines and necessary adjuncts for the use of the film. The Department of Labor is busying itself with the awakening of sluggish responsibilities. It is probing the consciousness of the educationist. The community worker by means of the film is striving to solve social and moral problems which the war has revealed, and our Government has realized its unlimited usefulness as a distributor of propaganda. What, then, are you, the producer, going to do to meet that demand of the near future which will serve not only the purposes of the best influences of civilization, but also those of the exchequer of the industry?

MARGARET I. MACDNOALD.

New England Expresses Itself.

The fresh interest of the public in the subject of motion pictures following the war was indicated at two meetings held recently in Danielson, Conn., and Worcester, Mass. The former was held in the High School building of the town under the auspices of the Killingly Woman's Club, while the latter meeting, which took place in the Free Public Library building, was called by the Worcester Board of Review of Motion Pictures, composed of forty-nine representatives of civic and social organizations of the city. Both of these meetings were addressed by Orrin G. Cocks, Advisory Secretary of the National Board of Review. At the former the subjects discussed were the importance of the motion picture in connection with the war, the advances made in the motion picture art, and the use of selected motion pictures for young people. Questions were asked regarding the possibility of greater cooperation with the exhibitor in connection with "family nights" and the use of pictures considered particularly suitable for young people.

The Worcester Board of Review of Motion Pictures, purely voluntary in its organization, works in cooperation with The National Board and the city officials. At the meeting great interest was shown in the marked developments of the motion picture in the course of the last three years and the patriotic service of the motion picture industry. The discussion which followed the address centered around parental responsibility in the attendance of young people at motion picture exhibitions, the opportunities for the larger use of educational pictures, and the possibility of extended family programs. The audience appeared to appreciate the impracticability of State action as a means of regulating the motion picture industry, supporting rather the opinion that a volunteer review of pictures on a national basis, such as is conducted by The National Board, was more suitable in a democracy.

To Make Film in Kentucky Mountains.

Harry Levey, of the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is arranging for a trip into the Kentucky Mountains for the purpose of photographing conditions as they are known to exist in these parts, and also the beneficial results of the community work being carried on by Alice Geddes Lloyd.

It is three years now since Mrs. Lloyd journeyed into the mountains of Kentucky and laid the foundation for a philanthropic work, which has grown more and more extensive. She has taught these primitive people many useful truths regarding modern methods of living. The community work being done by her is of a most interesting type, all of which is expected to be brought out in the film which Mr. Levey is about to make.

Films of Business Active.

The Films of Business Corporation seems to be unusually active since the return of the industry to more normal conditions. It has established a service for foreign distribution of industrial pictures. This points to a larger appreciation of the values of the industrial film and suggests the existence of a cooperative spirit in the relations between commerce and screen, which should mean larger developments in the business assets of both. The first foreign shipment of industrial film from the Films of Business Corporation left for Cuba last week.

A vocational school on the Pacific Coast has just purchased for use in its class rooms a copy of this company's "Mephisto" auger bit picture, and has ordered a copy of their latest on Stafford's ink, which has just been completed.

Look to Goldwyn for Ford Weekly.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has contracted for the distribution rights of the Ford Educational Weekly. This means, among other things, that all the Ford negatives, past and present, will be under the control of Goldwyn. It also means that the pictures will be re-edited and re-titled, and will be placed before the public à la Goldwyn.

The Ford Educational Weekly has made rapid gain in popularity owing to the excellent quality of both material and photography employed in the making of it. Reviews of the first Goldwyn releases will appear in these columns very shortly.

Foreign Titles for Biological Film.

Mrs. Katherine F. Carter of the Exhibitors Booking Agency has been unusually busy for the past few weeks on work for the United States Government. This work entails the translation of the subtitles of the biological film "How Life Begins" into French and Italian and the inserting of these translated titles into prints which are to be exhibited in France and Italy. These exhibitions will be given at the various camps, and in connection with other community work and in schools abroad.

The extensive success with which this film has met is unparalleled in the history of any single educational production. The first prints for foreign exhibition were due to start their journey overseas this week.

Pictograph Theories on Silent Gun.

Now that the war is over one of the strongest impulses of man will be that of theorizing. The mechanical mind will busy itself trying to contrive some way to eliminate the shortcomings of war machinery and other things. Walter H. Nirgenau, of the Bray Studios, has begun already, and has provided us with large hopes of a silent gun to which there is no recoil, and which is manipulated by means of electro magnets. The illustration given in the 147th issue of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph is a graphic one and shows how a magnetic field created by a group of wire coils placed in proper contact with the electric current can be increased by the addition of a larger number of coils. The multiplying of the coil groups and points of contact along the body of the gun carriage is intended to increase the carrying power as the shell in its passage through the barrel is propelled swiftly from one to the other and is finally expelled from the muzzle of the gun.

This is one of the most interesting theoretical drawings that the screen has exhibited.

Infant Nation Illuminated.

Facts concerning the Czechoslovak nation which has been born of the confusion of the late war appear in the 147th issue of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. It is interesting to find that the heads of this new nation of Central Europe are men and women of high intellectual calibre, and that the officers of their army which played so noble a part in Poland and Siberia during the war are in many cases men of famous literary attainments.

In this release of the Pictograph (6095) the story of the struggle of these brave races is shown. The pictures were taken in Russia, Poland and Siberia, and were brought to the Bray studios by Dr. Thomas Masaryk, the great Czechoslovak leader and first president of the nation. President Masaryk appears in the picture as does also Charles Pergler, known as the "Miracle Man" of the Czechoslovak movement in America, and others whose names are well known.

"Clouds That Smile."

One of the most delightful of cloud studies will be found in the Post-Pathe picture "Clouds that Smile." It is one of the few scenic films that is able to enthuse its audience to the point of applause. When shown at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, during the week of Dec. 8, the audience showed its appreciation of the series of beautifully photographed cloud scenes in the same manner as it did the musical numbers on the program, suggesting again to the mind of the writer the poetry of nature which the skilful photographer is able to bring to the screen and which goes hand in hand with the more emotional art of music. To attempt a detailed description of the picture would be futile. Suffice it to say that there are clouds of all kinds, viewed at all angles in their intercourse with the trees, the mountains and rocks, the rivers and lakes, and sometimes with the sky alone with only themselves to populate it.

"Celebes, in Dutch Malaysia."

A quite pleasing travel number of the Post-Pathe films which pictures life on the island of Celebes, in the Dutch Malaysia group. The greatest port is Macassar, and the natives, who number a million and a quarter all told, resemble the Javanese. This subject shows market scenes, loading and unloading of vessels, religious edifices and various types of native faces.

"Back to Nature."

Major Jack Allen is making a series of outdoor pictures. His idea is a good one which has many possibilities, and very shortly he intends to engage even more seriously in the making of these pictures of which but one has been shown to the public thus far.

This particular picture "Back to Nature" presents considerable of the comedy element, as well as entertaining common sense methods of living the simple life. The story of the picture is that of a man who wagered that he could live a certain length of time in the woods without the aid of outside influences. Here he found the food that nature had provided him with, lighted his fire with nature's own tools and lived in seeming luxury after the methods provided for by nature. This picture was shown at the Strand Theatre, New York, during the week of Dec. 8.

Industrial Producer Honored.

Camilla Donworth, president of the Films of Business Corporation has been elected one of the directors of the Salesmanship Club of New York, and has also been made chairman of its publicity committee.

Good salesmanship affects the moving picture industry just as vitally as capable production; and to no branch of the business can it be more effectively applied than to the educational end. In fact negligent salesmanship rather than lack of production has been the hindrance in extensive distribution of the educational film.

The Salesmanship Club of New York in that regenerative state which reorganization brings, has pledged itself to bring about better conditions for the industrial world by advocating the best methods of salesmanship among its members and to inspire in them a desire to make a study of the art for the best interests of their employers and industry at large.

We congratulate Miss Donworth on her eligibility to fill the offices in which the Salesmanship Club has done her the honor to place her.

Northeastern Theatres to Aid in Coal Saving

AT the request of the United States Fuel Administration the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry through its fuel conservation committee has inaugurated a coal saving campaign to cover the northeastern section of the United States.

This campaign will be conducted in the motion picture theatres in the territory which the Fuel Administration desires to reach by means of trailers attached to the regular weekly issues of the news weeklies.

Sufficient trailers have been provided to cover a campaign of six weeks, the plan being to release two trailers each week. The news weeklies were selected for this purpose owing to the fact that the three weeklies co-operating with the association in this work, the Universal, Pathe and Gaumont, reach practically every theatre in the territory in which the Fuel Administration believes there exists an acute necessity for the economy of coal during the coming winter months.

This territory includes New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia. It is the desire of the Fuel Administration that these trailers be not shown outside of the above mentioned territory and exhibitors not located within the restricted zone are requested not to show the trailers in case news weeklies come to them with the trailers attached.

The plans for this campaign have been under discussion by the Fuel Conservation Committee of the National Association and the Fuel Administration for considerable time. This committee consists of Marcus Loew, chairman; P. A. Powers, B. S. Moss, Samuel Rothapfel, William Brandt, Sydney Cohen, Albert Lowe, Gabriel Hess and Harry Crandall.

Jam On in Adams, Mass.

There is a lively controversy on here between Dr. A. K. Boom, chairman of the Board of Selectmen and political leader of the town, and Thomas Russell, one of the town's largest real estate owners. Russell also runs the Taylor Theatre.

The Boom-Russell controversy came to a head when Mr. Russell sought a license for a picture show on a Sunday and the license was held up to the last minute.

The two men met on the street and there was such an angry discussion that a crowd collected. Dr. Boom declared there would be no more Sunday night shows at the Taylor. Mr. Russell said there would be a show at the Taylor as long as other theatres were allowed to have Sunday shows. The outcome of the controversy is being watched with considerable interest.

Duffy to Represent Bessie Love.

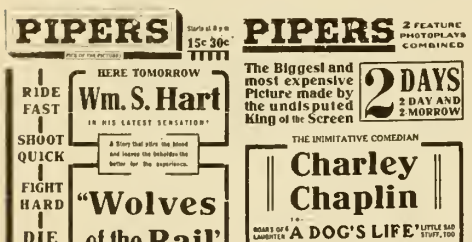
Bessie Love, who became recently affiliated with Vitagraph, has engaged Gerald C. Duffy, as her personal representative. For the past six months Mr. Duffy has been serving in the same capacity for William S. Hart, and prior to that time was for three years editor of Picture-Play Magazine. Mr. Duffy is well known as a fiction and magazine writer and has over two hundred published contributions on his record.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Connors, Post Graduate.

DAN CONNORS, of Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., has been taking a post-graduate course in advertising. A long time ago Dan bought a copy of Picture Theatre Advertising and got interested to the point where he learned the types in his local office and marked his ads to get exact results. He did not know at that time how useful his knowledge would come in, but lately the draft drained the town of compositors. They have left the country towns to go to the cities to replace men called to the colors, and the small papers are shy good job men. This is where Dan had a cinch. He could go to the case and set his own advertising, and that is what he did. He writes that he can set the space and tear it down to improve and keep at it until he gets just what he wants. He is on his own time, so no one kicks at the time he takes, and he gets some excellent results. Better still, he knows more about type setting from an advertising angle than a lot of practical compositors. As a side angle, he can stretch his space a bit without a kick coming. The office is glad enough to have him around, and he can get extra space for the same money. The examples reproduced here are all set by Dan himself. We wonder how many managers who have not had actual newspaper experience can do the same thing. The samples are from proofs, so the lock-up is not always exact, but the proofs are on better paper than the regular issue. The first is a pair of two eights.



A pair of two eights, written and set up by Dan Connors, of Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev.

The left hand example shows a lot more panel work than is generally regarded as desirable, but panel work does well for this house, and what is good for the house is good advertising. It gets the message over, and gets it over strong. We like the idea of linking the large panels with smaller ones, and we like the semi-open panel at the top better than we do the wholly closed panel below the title. Dan seems to have hit upon a new idea here that is a good one. Leaving the top and bottom open keeps the connection between the various banks. The same idea in another form is used on the right. Here it is done to connect two chief titles. As a proof reader Dan seems to be as bad as the professionals, for he was after "inimitable" and not "inimitative" comedian. For one thing, a nice sense of proportioning is shown. This is something you get more quicly from handling the actual metal than you ever can arrive at from study. Both displays are well balanced, and worth while studying. A smaller example is a double 2½-inch space for "The Beast of Berlin." Here Dan again uses the combination of a hairline rule with twelve point, but in this case he uses two pieces of six point to get his twelve. He gets the suggestion of a special strip. Also, he gets an expanded and condensed letter of the same family. We don't know whether this is intentional or whether the type was improperly distributed, but his yellow and dogs do not match up. If you'll look at the top line of the "See" bank you'll notice that he dropped down to lower case for the last word, probably because he could not get the line all in with caps. That's cheating. The last sample is a three 6½. We do not like the rule under the top bank. Solid would have been better. It would have been better, too, to have given the name of the opera house. In Virginia City this does not matter so much, for there is only one opera house, and everyone knows that; but, even at that, it would have been better to have put the name in. Here the copy is good, but we should have more closely linked the three special banks, "It's a patriotic duty to see this picture. It will make you a real American and it will make you glad that you are an American." This is not gotten over as well as it might have been, but it is well done. We're proud of Mr. Connors, for we regard him in a sense as a pupil, since he used our text book. If the picture business ever gets bad, he can turn to the printing office and make more than enough to live upon. Jost "fooling around" in the days when there were printers to be had, gives him an advantage now that he has to either set his own type or be grateful for any sort of a botch. No one can get the best results unless he knows type, and he can get the very best results only if he can work on the case himself. We have seen a lot worse work from men regarded as competent compositors, and Mr. Connors knows both the display and advertising value of his lines, which most compositors do not.

Cut Placement.

A. C. Raleigh, of the American, Butte, Mont., sends in a pair of advertisements forming a study in cut placement. That on the right side is formal, conventional style. The cut is centred in the three tens, and the text is paneled. In the other the cut is taken over to the right hand almost to the margin of the space, and the box is replaced by strips of rule. The difference is slight, yet small as it is, the change certainly does make a difference in the appearance of the work. Mr. Raleigh explains that the star is not known to his patrons, so he leaves her name off. That may be good policy, but we like better the hammering in of the name against future appearances. When a star is not known, then is the time to make her known.

Here's One.

Lately we asked about Children's Matinees. The Elmwood, Buffalo, gave a special performance the day following Thanksgiving under the auspices of a church guild, using Jack and the Beanstalk. Have you hooked in yet?

Carry On.

The motion picture theatre can be just as essential in peace as in war if you run the right sort of a house. Make it more than ever your community centre.

Got Right in It.

Nikitas Dipson, of the Family Theatre, Batavia, N. Y., made his contribution to the United War Fund Campaign count.

He put the money into a showing of "The Two Orphans," and paid all of the expenses on the day, turning over the complete receipts to the local fund. He used three sixes in which to advertise the performance, and set forth the idea in this bank:

The entire receipts at all performances, both afternoon and evening, will be given to the United War Fund campaign as the personal contribution of Mr. Nikitas Dipson. Mr. Dipson is paying all expenses incident to the presentation of the picture, salaries of employes, etc., so that every cent received at the box office will go directly into the War Fund.

This is not only giving money to the fund, but investing it so that it shows a handsome profit. It identifies Mr. Dipson as one of the leaders in welfare movements, and it gives to the theatre a standing that a mere contribution would not bring. Also it would not be surprising to find that such an action brought in new business that stuck beyond the benefit performance.

Making a Splash.

Pete Smith, of Paramount, puts the philosophy of advertising into small compass in a recent supplement to his press book on Sporting Life. After the regution prepared advertisements were sent out, he got up a special mat for a four fulls, and he sent along this argument:

YOU CAN'T MAKE A BIG SPLASH WITH A SMALL PEBBLE

When you cast a small stone into the water the ripples spread out into a small circle.

When you cast a large stone the ripples are wider and larger.

When you cast a boulder the result is overwhelming.

This four-column advertisement, specially prepared for "Sporting Life," is the advertising boulder that will cause wide ripples of comment in your town and will overwhelm your seating capacity.

Use the boulder! You can't make a big splash with a small pebble!

That's good enough to paste over your desk to look at whenever you have some special feature. A four fulls costs a lot of money, even in a small town, but if it brings in the cost of the space and a quarter more you are twenty-five cents in, plus the value of the suggestion you have left in the reader's mind, and it's pretty close to a cinch that a splash will do more than pay for itself, and generally it will do much more if you have the show to back it up and run the film for more than one day. Incidentally, that "Sporting Life" special mat is one of the best-laid advertisements we have seen lately. We do not always like those Paramount ads, but this one is thoroughly practical. It is not possible to show it in full, but this upper half is the essential. The top line and the four lines in the hatching give the meat of the idea. Below the announcement the items of interest are taken up in a series of paragraphs.

They Got Together.

The influenza scare had at least one good result. It brought the managers in many towns closer together. When the reopening date was announced in Indianapolis, the theatres pooled their spaces to get a big display for the reassurance of the public. They took an entire page, each house getting a proportionate space for the display of its own attractions. The combined effect got over where similar announcements in a dozen advertisements of various spaces would not have been noticed. Just in passing, doesn't the Circle's combination of "Laughing Bill Hyde" and "Shoulder Arms" strike you as being about the best that can be done in an all-laughing show?

and Chinamen to suggest that the story is laid in China. Benday is effective, but for that very reason Mr. Franklin does not overdo it. In the original the space is a three fours, set in without white margin, but it works on a corner so that it has two white edges.

Car Cards.

L. W. Barclay, of the Grand Amusement Company, Johnstown, Pa., writes that he has tied up with the local and suburban trolleys for the exclusive showing of theatrical cards in the cars, and writes that he thinks it will prove more advantageous as well as less troublesome and expensive than billboards. We are not altogether ready to say "Amen" to that, for we think that billboards pay, and pay well, but car cards certainly reach a lot of people if they are well planned. There is a lot to the planning, though. Lately the Brooklyn cars have been carrying a table of some sort. It cannot be read by the man with average eyesight standing in front of it, and only professional curiosity led us to stand on the seat one evening when we were going home late to see who was wasting all that money. It was the annual statement of a bank. The name of the bank was printed in twelve-point letters, and it the largest type on the card. That is a plain waste of money. We cannot reproduce the card of Mr. Barclay's that we like the best, because of the color values, but here is a black and white which stands out well except for the name of the star. We think that a blacker letter would have been better. It must be remembered that a car on a suburban run is rather long, and a card to work must be capable of attracting attention from either end. One thing we notice is that all of Mr. Barcley's cards have a big black date. The cards are changed twice a week, and the date is important. He gets a better effect with an all-type display for "The Whip." This can be read no matter where a person sits. But it must be remembered that people sitting on the same side of the car as the sign cannot see it. This is one drawback of car advertising. It is too haphazard. Mr. Barcley also sends in, rather late, a stage setting used at the its depth and softness, but the effect is far from harsh with a soft red lighting. The flags cover the screen. They are correctly placed, but the effect would have been better had the cantons been hung so that they are next the frame, the flag on the left being reversed. Mr. Barcley used red lights, but did you ever try the effect of a very few white lights with your colored bulbs? Do not use enough to affect the color, but a few, well spaced, will give a brilliancy to a color that you cannot get with any medium. In the days when the serpentine dance was the craze, one dancer was noted for the brilliancy of her lights, and her electrician got the effects merely by poking his finger through the mediums in the frames to get a little white light through. Experiment with this idea and you can obtain some unusual results.

Cut Placing.

The Lyric, Toledo, shows an odd placement of cuts and dates in a throwaway. They are a bit late for Paramount week, which was in September, but the cut idea is odd. It will be noticed that the cuts and dates are thrown into the margin, the date being connected with the attraction by a bracket. The connection would be more apparent were a small piece of rule, or two or three hyphens, set as leaders, used to extend toward the title. A first might be even better to emphasize the connection, but the idea is good and shows a new way to utilize the uniform Paramount cuts.

House Names.

Here is part of a two eights for a combined picture and vaudeville bill. We do not like the placement of the house name. In so deep a space it is possible to get room across the top for the house name, particularly as in the vaudeville space, which is not shown, and a coming bank,

A bad placement of the house name. In such a space the article and "theatre" should be dropped.

there is plenty of space to steal. If for any reason this was not feasible, it would be better to cut out the "The" and "theatre" and set merely the single word Orpheum, if necessary putting "today and tomorrow in an eight-point to let in a deeper letter, but with the extended face then possible, the width would make up largely for the lack of space. Just for that matter we think we would have given Fairbanks more space in an eight. He gets less than half the space, and he will fill the house four times over as against a couple of small vaudeville acts. The vaudeville is given nearly two inches. This should have been given to Fairbanks, that his name might be run clear across the space. There is no use in buying a big name if you do not use it to the greatest possible advantage. Buy the name and then circus it. It's the only way to get all the money that name will bring.

The Cleveland Directory.

Here is the Cleveland directory. With the special heading it runs four tens, and the spaces vary from three and a half inches to two lines. Evidently the space is sold by the line and not by the inch. This is the case in most large papers, but some advertising managers realize that it pays better to make a special inch rate and get a better showing for the effect it has on commercial advertising. We do not see any particular reason why theatres should pay more for space than drygoods houses, where the space does not carry ample press notice, but in most instances a higher rate is charged, some New York papers charging two and a half times the cost of general run. In most of the spaces the display is poor.

The daily program from the Cleveland News.

In the Stillman, for example, the use of the star cast overshadows the title. Compare the display with that for the Knickerbocker. Here the title shows up well. There is less text, but the composition is better, too. The Stillman could have run in the names of the stars and so have gained space for a larger type for the title or, at least, for some isolating white space, which would have served about as well. We think it would pay the larger papers to get a special compositor trained to show-print work and keep him on that work alone, or, at least, to let him set all the amusement advertising. About the worst showing is for the Cedar, in which a three-eighths reverse cut is made to carry a single line of eight-point giving the title. That is disproportionate. It would be better to cut to an eighteen-point type house name, so that it would work into that one-line title. But about the worst display of the lot is that for the Orpheum, in which all the lines are about the same face, without regard to the relative values. Fairbanks, Chaplin and the word "Comedy" all get the same distinction. It could be a lot better.

A Composite.

Here is a half page from a Terre Haute weekly paper. It has as its foundation three of the Paramount mats, worked up with a couple of boxes and the house signature. The panels are wrongly placed in that the announcement reads Sunday-Monday, Thursday-Friday-Saturday, and Tuesday-Wednesday. Probably this is because two of the boxes relate to the Saturday show, but the Arbuckle panel could stay where it is, and the "Special Matinee" could have gone above the Saturday in its proper place. This would also have the advantage of centering the today and tomorrow, but this should have been dropped to the bottom with the house signature rising to the top of the centre. A good idea is suggested here, but the idea is better than its execution.

All Wrapped Up.

Herbert Jennings, of the Strand, Ottawa, used a prescription envelope to advertise "To Hell with the Kaiser. On the outside "Dr. Joy" was printed in the upper left-hand corner with a 36-point "Good dope" in capitals across the centre. Inside a card cut to fit read, "3 Excellent thoughts," which were, to keep your feet dry, see "To Hell with the Kaiser" and buy Victory Bonds, the Canadian equivalent of our own Liberty Loan. Cards which might pass unnoticed by themselves will often be read if they are enveloped and so made to appeal to the common trait of curiosity.

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope, properly stamped, accompanies the inquiry. No attention will be paid to questions relating to the market, nor can manuscripts or parts of manuscripts be criticized.

More Coals.

CLIPPING a few paragraphs on general hints from this department, a recent issue of the Authors' League Bulletin hands out a pat and a back-kick, jointly, in this editorial:

> Let us heap a few coals of fire. Though Epes Winthrop Sargent does say naughty things of authors and the Authors' League, his is a bright page and a page full of good suggestions to photoplay writers in the Moving Picture World. We would be very glad to have him do one or two for the Bulletin. * * * He finds fault with the Bulletin, however, for quoting Dana Burnett's definition of an Authors' League author as one who knows when he is being cheated by the movies, and why. Although they cheat, authors, it seems, are never cheated by the movies. The Sargent euphemism of this charge runs thus: "have seen their brain ehildren butchered by incompetent direction and cutting." Well, we will accept the amendment; but if this isn't being cheated, what is? It's almost as bad, at least, as having your magazine stories stolen.

We have not the time to do an article for the Bulletin, but we hope they quote the essential part of this story. We find fault with the Bulletin because it too often caters to the soreheads. This may be politic as a matter of circulation and support, for there are a hundred thousand soreheads to every contented author of photoplays, just as there are fifty soreheads to every satisfied fiction writer. And the Bulletin has gone about it the wrong way. It has taken too strongly the attitude that all makers of photoplays maintain editorial staffs who are not going around with a piece of lead pipe wrapped in a sock merely because it is safer and more remunerative to steal ideas from budding authors and pull down a salary for doing that little thing. This, we think, is a mistake, and we have discouraged that sort of talk from readers of this department and think that the Bulletin should do the same.

We are more than willing to admit that there have been numerous well-authenticated cases of theft. Ideas sent into the studio have been stolen, while the manuscript was returned. Authors have seen their ideas taken and adapted to a point where it is moral if not legal thievery. And we most whole-heartedly admit that we do not blame the better class of writers for getting sore when purchased book rights are so distorted in production that it is difficult to realize that the thing on the screen is supposed to be their own. Producers who will provide a "happy ending" to Victorien Sardou are not going to be more courteous toward a lesser flight of authors.

We quite agree with the Authors' League that editorial and studio conditions are all wrong, and should be righted, but we do not believe that the League is going the right way about it.

As for the question of thefts, these are largely the individual acts of employes rather than the organized thievery of a department, and the pieture eompanies are as mueh sinned against as sinning. More than one producer has had to come down with four-figure royalties because, all innocently, he purchased and produced standard works under the impression that he had bought original stories. It is very true that some of these works are so well known to every student of literature that any person charged with the purchase of literary ideas should recognize them at sight, but the fact remains that the stories were purchased in good faith and the company was swindled.

For the rest, the matter of duplication of idea is so common that it is unwise to pay attention to general charges. The League itself maintains the best legal safeguard against actual theft in the registration scheme, which is open alike to members and non-members. Short of the adoption of this scheme by the Copyright Office, there can be no better provision made against theft, and it would be wise to drop this angle.

There remains, then, the question of a better understanding between author and producer. There can be no undestanding between an intelligent author and an egotistical director, particularly one of the old-time variety; but it should be possible, through the adoption of a less truculent attitude, for the League to eventually bring about a better understanding between the man who writes and the producer of pictures; not the director, but rather the chief executive.

Little can be done with the director—the stage manager—so long as he occupies his present position of authority. He will never meet the author half-way so long as his superiors uphold him in his contention that he must be permitted to do things his own way. His armor of egotism is too thick to be pierced by any well-directed shot.

This being the ease, the only thing to do is to work on the man who makes the director possible. And at the same time the author should be educated. More than half the trouble at the present time is that the story the author offers must be changed because it is not practicable. He has not written a picture story, but has created a fiction, and changes must be made to adapt it to the screen. First of all, the League must seek to educate its authors to write in motion picture rather than in fiction.

And mind you, that does not mean that authors must be trained to write perfect continuities. Some of them cannot, and others will not, and it may not be wholly desirable. But the author must learn to write a plot that can be translated into action without ehange. He must be kept after until he takes the trouble to study his medium. That is where the chief trouble lies. He turns in something that cannot be translated into action, selling his name rather than an idea. If he cares so little for his name, he cannot expect others to go to extremes to safeguard his reputation. If he writes an impractical story and gets an impossible result through adaptation, he has not grounds for reasonable complaint. He must be made to realize that the motion picture is as different from the fiction story as it is from the stage—that it is a motion picture—and neither a novel nor a stage play. He must write words capable of being translated into action without too free an adaptation.

When this happy condition is arrived at; when the executives of picture companies have reasonable assurance that they will be given opportunity to buy motion picture plots and not stage or type stories, then they may be approached on the subject of production changes with some assurance of success. At the present time, if you seek to persuade a producer that his directors mutilate the plots and so discourage authors, he will show you ample proof that the initial fault lies with the author himself. He must first be shown stories that are pictures, and then possibly he can be persuaded to bring about the changes that will lead to a better understanding between author and director.

So long as the director feels that the author is a fool seven times damned and the author knows that the director is a rough-necked ignoramus who could not direct a third-rate stock company, there is no chance of their ever getting together. Each must be educated to appreciate the merits of the other. The author must be made to understand these two great facts:

Only the author of long practical experience can fully realize his idea upon the screen through the director.

He must realize that the director is his collaborator rather than his realizer. He works in words and the director in action to visualize any given idea, and each must work with the other.

It is safe to say that few authors realize this. They cannot understand why a director cannot follow their idea and give them their story, just as the linotyper sets the type of their printed fiction and gives them precisely what they wrote. It cannot be done, because the medium differs. The director must leave his impress upon the picture. If he is the right sort of a director he can give the flavor of the author plus a touch of his own quality, but the author and the director must come into closer contact, and it should be a part of the work of the League bulletin to bring them closer together and not continually print matter tending to hold them apart. If the League will do this—and it can—it will be performing a vastly greater service to authors than through attacks upon the picture institutions generally and upon the say-so of the man who is sore because he cannot sell his stuff. The League is a power for good in spots—but the spots should be blended into a solid whole of hundred per cent. efficiency.

War Plays.

Pack those war plays in camphor, and save camphor by not writing any just-after-the-war stories. Go back to good romance.

Let It Develop.

Don't be in too much of a hurry to sell. Let your good ideas grow into big ones. They will if you will wait.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Probably Burned Wires or Bad Connections.

Joseph Grasso, New York City, says:

"Am having trouble with my light. Could you help me out? Have two Simplexes three years old. Use 110-volt D. C. On one machine I am unable to keep steady light for more than two minutes. At end of that time I lose it. Rheostats are 35-50 ampere. Have them on full and light keeps blowing and jumping from side to side. Have examined rheostats and they seem to be O. K. Have tried every kind of carbons, set in every imaginable way. Result always the same. All connections in good shape. Am at present using ½-inch solid lower old German carbons, but that does not change the result. The machine on which the trouble occurs gives more light from the rheostat than does the other one."

Presumably you have each projector lamp connected to its own separate rheostat. Merely to "examine the rheostat" is not enough. You must test it out for grounds. To do this proceed as follows: With the lamp carbons separated and the arc not burning, attach one wire of your test lamp to the frame of the rheostat, first sandpapering a spot clean and bright so that the wire will make good electrical contact. Now touch the other end to the opposite carbon arm of your lamp—carbon arm, wire attached to which is NOT attached to rheostat. If the test lamp lights, or if you get a spark as you rub the wire end along the metal of the carbon arm, there is a ground between the grids or coils of the resistance and its frame, which it will be up to you to locate (see page 260 of handbook) and eliminate. If your rheostats set on an iron shelf, or on anything which grounds their frames, you might slip small pieces of glass under the legs before making the above test. In fact is is best that your rheostats rest on insulating material anyhow. I would strongly recommend that you establish a permanent test lamp as per figure 108, page 258 of the handbook, and test your circuits every day. It will take but a moment, if you have the permanent ground test lamp, and may save many dollars, through current leakage, in the course of a year.

Assuming that there are no unusual draughts of air inside your lamp-house, that "jumping from side to side" sounds to me like variable voltage at the arc, and that most likely means a variable ground, loose connection or badly burned wires. DON'T ASSUME A CONNECTION IS ALL RIGHT JUST BECAUSE IT LOOKS ALL RIGHT. Take it apart and examine it, remembering that all connections outside those at rheostat and inside lamphouse MUST be through soldered lugs. Half-inch solid carbon below is right if your amperage is below 40, though the small-diameter metal-coated carbons are still better. Give address of theatre and I'll drop in and see you.

What Constitutes Competency?

Recently we interviewed the official now in charge of projectionist examinations in Greater New York City. We called attention to the utter inadequency of examinations, describing the British Columbia examination to him, citing it as a really competent examination. "But good heavens, Mr. Richardson," said he, "if we put any such examination into effect here we we would not pass five applicants in a year!"

And the disgrace of it is that his estimate of the number likely to pass is perhaps liberal. Personally I doubt if three would get by. I even doubt that anything more than a very small number of men now holding projectionists licenses in New York City could wrestle successfully with the British Columbia examination. And that fact (for it is a fact) is not to the credit of the First City of the Land. Let us see how true it is anyhow. Could you, Mr. New York City License Holder, step up to a switchboard and, with your trusty test lamp and voltmeter, select the switches thereon carrying the following: 500-volt, 240-volt and 110-volt current of the following varieties, viz: D.C. and A.C., the latter single and three-phase or single and two-phase, remembering that on this switchboard there will be some "funny" connections made, which it is up to you to untangle. Could you then step to a pile of cables and select therefrom one of the right size and of correct insulation to connect up the motor generator (not a toy apparatus, but a big motor generator) and then connect up the motor generator, which sets there entirely disconnected and with probably several things needed in the way of adjustment before it will get on the job. Having done all this (if you are able) could you go to a table whereon lie two or three projection lenses in a completely disassembled condition, together with several condenser lenses of various kinds and focal lengths, select the right lenses, assemble them and line up your optical train to suit the local condition there found, connect up the projection machine to the motor generator, adjust the projector (which will most likely not be ready to run) and put a good picture on the screen? If you can do all this you are then asked to figure out on the blackboard a number of resistance problems, such as, for instance, what amperage you will get from a 110-volt 25-ampere and and 220-volt 40-ampere rheostat hitched in multiple on 70 volts, or in series on 500 volts; or what rheostats you would select, from those shown you by the examiner, to get a certain amperage, involving use of several of them, on a given voltage. In short the examiner will ascertain whether or not you understand rheostatic resistance and its practical and theoretical application. And there are other things. Oh, no, the examination is none too difficult. That is what an examination is for; to prevent the incompetent from securing a license. To-day the great city of New York "examines" an applicant for license as projectionist, gives him a license and solemnly declaring to the world at large that he is "competent," whereas, as a bald-headed matter of fact in at least forty-eight cases out of every fifty, if not an even larger percentage, he could not tell you how much tension a projector should have at its gate, nor could he figure out the amperage resultant from a 110-volt and a 220-volt, 40-ampere rheostat connected in either series or multiple on 110-volt current though a kingdom were his reward. The "correct distance of the revolving shutter from the aperture" is to him a mere meaningless jumble of words. Ask him to connect up and adjust a 150-ampere motor generator set and he would have hydrophobia. Suggest to him that he assemble a completely disassembled projector optical system and he would bite you. Yet he holds a New York City license declaring him to be "competent." Isn't it about time the farce be stopped? Should an incompetent man be passed merely because the city fears there are few who are competent? Answer me that Mr. Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity.

Psychology of Projection.

Samuel Rothapfel has promised that on his return from the Pacific Coast he will prepare for this department an article on the psychology of projection. This article will, we feel certain, be of extreme interest from many viewpoints. Mr. Rothapfel undoubtedly is past master of the art of the presentation of the photoplay, taking the presentation as a whole. He gets effects that I have seen equalled nowhere else, and in the doing of this what he terms the psychology of projection is involved. We shall wait his article with more than ordinary interest, because of the fact that it will, we believe, read us a lesson in the artistry of projection.

Ingento Sold in St. Louis.

Inquiry for address of maker of Ingento Dissolving Slide Carrier brought information as to name of makers in Chicago. Frederick R. Miller, Projectionist, Jamaica, L. I., says the Ingento is sold by Erker Brothers Optical Co., 608 Olive street, St. Louis, Mo. It costs two bucks in wood and three and a half silver cart wheels in metal. There, gosh hang it, we have the Ingento matter all fixed up, and another soul made happy.

New Lens Charts.*

The accompanying charts represent the most up-to-date practice in optics of the projector. They are by far the most complete of any heretofore attempted. These charts are the work of Brother John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn., but all rights to same have been purchased outright by the Moving Picture World. By the use of them the projectionist may quickly, and with at least very fair accuracy, ascertain the following: (A) Proper condenser combination, remembering that in order to use such charts IT IS ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY THAT THE CONDENSER LENSES BE SPACED NOT TO EXCEED 1/16 OF AN INCH APART. The charts are calculated on the E F of a condenser combintion with lenses set that way. If placed further apart the E F of the condenser is altered, and the whole optical result is upset. Don't attempt to use the charts with the tip of the curved surfaces of the lenses more than 1/16 of an inch apart. (B) Correct distance from a point at center of condenser to film. (C) Correct diameter of projection lens to avoid waste of light, which means waste of electrical power, hence waste of coal. (D) Correct distance of revolving shutter from aperture, which is the point at which revolving shutter main blade may be reduced to its lowest possible width, thus conserving light and reducing flicker to the lowest practicable point.

The whole chart is based on amperage used at the arc, or, to put it in another way, the condenser combination which will automatically fix the position of an arc of any given amperage at the closest possible position to the lens consistent with prevention of abnormal condenser breakage. It therefore follows that in order to use the charts intelligently one must know the amperage with at least a very fair degree of accuracy; also whether D.C. or A. C, since combinations for the two currents are quite different. The charts are sufficiently elastic to permit of reasonable variation in amperage without seriously affecting results. For instance, if amperage is given roughtly as 50 D.C., but actually is anywhere between say 47 and 53, the chart will work fairly well, though the more nearly the amperage is to the given number, the better. Many projectionists raise their amperage while a dense scene is being projected, lowering it to normal again when the dense scene is finished. This will have the practical effect of subjecting the condenser to greater heat than is designed by the chart. There will, however, be no damage done, provided there is time before the end of the reel, when the arc is shut off, for the condenser to again cool down to normal working temperature.

I would strongly advise projectionists to frame these charts and keep them on the walls of their projection rooms. Use them intelligently and they will be your friends, giving you maximum screen illumination for wattage consumed. We shall be glad to hear particulars of any case where the charts do not seem to give desired results. We venture the assertion that it will be found in such cases that you have omitted something, or have made some error in application.

The fraternity is deeply indebted to Brother John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, president New Haven, Conn., Local Union No. 273, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., for his really splendid work in the field of practical projection machine optics.

To use the charts, proceed as follows: First ascertain (having the power company fetch an ammeter and measure it if necessary) the amperage at your arc when it is working normally. Let us assume a case where it is 45 amperes D.C., and that we propose using meniscus bi-convex condensers. Looking under the heading "Amperage" on left side of chart No. 1, we find the fourth number down to be 45 D. C. We also find this number to be almost opposite the line under 20 inches in the center column, which indicates distance from aperture. This means the center of the condenser combination must be 20 inches from the film, or, to be precise, just a trifle less than 20 inches, each division of the center column representing one full inch, with cross lines placed in their exact relation. If it were 50 amperes D.C. the distance would be a little less than 19 inches. If 60 amperes D.C. it would be a trifle more than 17¼ inches. Do you get the idea? All right! Now looking to the left of "45 D. C." we find that the arc lens (Meniscus) must be 6½ and the front (bi-convex) 8½-inch focal length. WARNING: Having secured your condenser lenses, measure their focal length and be sure they are what the measurements call for. Don't expect maximum results from a 6¾-inch lens if the table calls for a 6½. Of course, there is considerable leeway in this without serious damage, but to get maximum results from the charts you must have what the charts call for, not something "pretty near." We have now arranged our condenser system as it should be. We next project a picture, focus it on the screen and then measure the back focus of the projection lens (distance film to lens when picture is in sharp focus on the screen) and look at left of chart, on line opposite "45" D.C. Suppose the back focus is 4 inches. Looking under that heading at top, on line opposite 45 D.C. we find the projection lens must be half way between 1.8 and 1.75 inches in diameter in order to not waste light, say not less than 1.8, and in practice we would probably have to get a 2-inch-diameter lens. It is here the only difficulty of application comes in, because in order to ascertain diameter, back focus must be a known quantity, hence a lens of proper focal length must be procured and used. If of correct diameter, well and good; if too large it may easily be stopped down, but if too small another lens of larger diameter must be procured, which may be found to have a different back focus, although of same equivalent focus. It is therefore advisable to get a lens of ample diameter and stop down, using dead black (non-gloss) metal for the purpose.

If the condensers are to be plano convex, then we follow the same course, looking on the opposite (right) side of "Distance to Aperture" column. The correct combination would be two 6½ condenser lenses, approximately 17½ inches from film, and projection lens diameter would be (for 4-inch b.f.) a trifle larger, requiring, in practice, a 2-inch-diameter lens.

Having ascertained all this, we next refer to chart Number 2. In the first instance distance from center of condenser to film is a trifle less than 20 inches. Looking at top of chart we find "20," and directly under that number, opposite b. f. of projection lens (4 inches in this instance), we find our aerial image (revolving shutter position) will be 8.8 inches from aperture, that its width (if slide carrier is used) will be .7 and its height .55 of an inch. The size of this particular one is illustrated at the right, 4th from top. We may thus place our shutter correctly and reduce its blade width to the minimum permissible under the local condition.

You will observe that the charts are made to accommodate both A.C. and D.C. and that for a given amperage the requirements for the two currents are at wide variance.

Any projectionist who cannot understand the method of practical application of the charts as here given, will be instructed if he gives me his amperage, kind of current and back focus of his projection lens. Might also give its diameter—diameter of its opening, of course.

Note: If slide carrier is not used then diameter of aerial image will be approximately the diagonal measurement of the slide carrier image.

From the Vancouver Local.

Brother E. B. Marshall, press secretary, Vancouver, B. C., local, pokes the following over the snow-capped Rockies:

"Dear Brother Richardson: While reading your article in a recent issue entitled 'A Bit Hard to Learn,' the thought occurred that it might be well to tell you what Local 348 is doing to help returned, disabled soldiers. In the first place, we are NOT incubating projectionists. We are, however, trying to teach a limited number of our returned, disabled soldier boys the art of motion picture projection, so that they will be able to compete with the higher class projectionists, and thus be in a position to demand and earn good salaries. In other words, we are helping the men to help themselves. Before a man is accepted as apprentice he must have the recommendation of the Vocational Training School for Returned Soldiers. Upon receiving this he is initiated into the local, and a course is laid out for him, beginning with a short course in mathematics and elementary optics. After this he is given a course of about three months in the Vocational Training School, studying the principles of the various electrical apparatus employed in projection. He is then placed in a projection room as apprentice to one of our members, and is given a very thorough grounding in all the branches of practical projection, as well as the uses and abuses of the different apparatus. This course we are endeavoring to teach in nine months (Pennsylvania and other state and U. S. officials take notice, please), but much depends upon the student himself. While the student is studying under the direction of our men he receives no pay from the theatre. All his expenses, including books and personal keep, are paid by the Government. These men must, after taking this course, pass the Government examination for projectionists, which is, as you know, a 'little bit stiff.' At this date none are far enough advanced to take an examination, but we have hopes that all will secure a first-class card.

"From the foregoing you will see that we are trying to do our bit to help the returned soldier. The number of apprentices we will accept is limited, as we cannot and do not lose sight of the fact that many of our own members are now overseas and are entitled to positions when they come back. Best wishes to yourself and the department."

There, that is what I call hard-boiled common sense. Moreover, it is illustrative of what can be accomplished when Government officials are sincere and place utility and common sense above job-holding and politics. Here is a case of intelligent co-operation between Government officials and departments and a labor union, which is making for the highest good of all concerned. As many of the returned, disabled soldiers are taken care of as can be assimilated without displacing men who have given up their positions in projection rooms to go to the front, and have the right to expect them back on return. Not only that, but such men as can be used will be made competent workmen, not half-baked incompetents who must struggle along handicapped by both physical disability and lack of knowledge. Brother Marshall aptly says the local is helping the man to help himself. This is a course which will work justice to the man, to the local, to the Government, to the theatre and to the moving picture industry. The contrast with what some of our train-him-a-week, give-him-a-license-and-set-him-to-work cheerful idiots want to do down here is painful. Up there they have regard for the interest of the returned soldier first. They propose to make him capable of doing high class work and demanding salary commensurate therewith. Down here they (or some of them) propose to shake hands with him at the hospital and shove (not to say kick) him into the profession, after maybe as much as a whole month of "lectures," and demonstration of a sort. They, of course, know he will not be a high class man, hence not in a position to demand remuneration as such. My compliments to British Columbia, to its officials and to Local Union 348. I wish that I could claim membership in that union. To carry its card is an honor!

The One and a Half to One Shutter.

I note that several standard projectors are being equipped with gears to drive their revolving shutters one and one-half revolutions to each picture, so that a two-wing shutter becomes in effect a three-winger, with the added advantage that the light ray is cut at much greater speed, thus operating to, in effect, reduce its diameter and enable the use of a main shutter blade cutting less light. The editor is a believer in the one and a half to one shutter. Applied intelligently by the projector, it offers, to my way of thinking, very decided advantages. It can be applied to any make of projector. In this connection let me add that there is considerable advantage in the large diameter shutter as compared to its smaller diameter brother—speaking of shutter running at normal speed. Insofar as concerns the light ray diameter at plane it is cut by the shutter blade, there is a definite distance the blade edge must travel after entering the ray before the picture is cut entirely off the screen. Now suppose we have a shutter traveling at the rate of 32 feet per second at the point in its diameter where in intercepts the light ray and that the ray is just one inch in diameter. Calculation of the time required to obliterate the picture on the screen is easy. Suppose we now increase the shutter diameter until speed at point of interception is doubled, do you not see it will be quite possible to cut down somewhat on the blade width because of the fact that less time is required to cut and uncover the ray? What's that? Yes, certainly the amount of blade reduction is small, but don't forget the gain comes twice sixteen equals 32 times per second (115,200 times an hour) at 60 feet of film per minute! Also there are possibilities of better balance and less flicker tendency.

Says Our Efforts Have Borne Fruit.

In replying to a question in the projection department of that excellent little journal, "The Canadian Moving Picture Digest," a correspondent says: "The revolving shutter is one of the causes of necessity for high amperage at the arc. The other important cause is the optical system. Although in the past three years the optical system has been made enormously more efficient than it was before the Moving Picture World projection department made its experiments, and Solar, James, Martin and others started something."

Yes, that is true, but we cannot allow the comment to stop at Solar, James and Martin. James was the man who really "started something," when he was down in Camden, Pa., after which Solar, Martin and Armstrong chipped in. But after all it was John Griffith who finally worked the accumulated data (of which he produced much) into workable form, and thus made it available to the industry. We note that G. A. McMahon is conducting the afore named department of the Digest. Good scout, is McMahon. Might I suggest to him the adoption of the new title "projectionist" in lieu of "operator." Was amused at statement in issue in question that "we are on the verge of seeing motion pictures projected in natural colors." Um, brother, we have been "on the verge" of that same thing for quite some years, if one listens to enthusiastic inventors. But it will come, I have faith to believe, and maybe very soon. There's no telling.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

Effect of the Great War Upon Music Is Discussed and Analyzed by Great Artists

DAVID BISPHAM, the distinguished musician and singer, has comprehensively and intelligently summed up the conditions which have carried music through the great world war.

We are printing his article in full, believing it bears a message which will be appreciated by our readers:

"The extraordinary events at present taking place in the world will undoubtedly have a great effect upon music. In what way it will change the output is not as yet apparent, but such a cataclysm cannot take place without producing a profound effect upon every mortal happening.

"It may be that some sensitive people, such as musical composers are, will be so shocked as to be scarcely able to set pen to paper at all, while others will be exalted by the tragedy of the war as to produce compositions of such grandeur as never before have been heard.

"Up to the present time, however, all that we see is a superficial, though no doubt well intended, mass of songs and instrumental pieces, emanating from those whose musical attainments are not of the highest order. Though their intentions are of the very best, they are over-flowing with a patriotism which in itself is superb, but which in its expression lacks the depth of thought which alone can cause any work to have more than an ephemeral existence.

"Some songs there are which seem immediately to have made an enormous appeal, such as 'Keep the Home Fires Burning' and 'Over There,' but in case of the latter song one may confidently say that George M. Cohan, having had the inspiration to build a song upon the familiar trumpet call which prevails throughout its refrain, did not rest until, by very hard work, he had produced what he knew would be a success, for such is the characteristic of a man trained to please the public.

"One must not make the mistake of supposing that all music used to arouse patriotism was written with the idea of the present condition in which the world finds itself. 'Tipperary,' written before the war for vaudeville performances, is known to have been so strenuously applied to war purposes as to become for some reason so objectionable as to be withdrawn. Elgar's magnificent melody, first called 'Pomp and Circumstance' and later made into the song 'The Land of Hope and Glory,' had not war as its inspiration. It is an episode in the coronation march written for the accession of King Edward VII to the throne of England.

"Nothing in recent music has been finer in its tragic bearing than the symphonic work produced less than two years ago at Carnegie Hall by Bloch, the French Jew.

"There is sure to be a number of fine songs, odes, choral pieces, symphonies and operas resulting from the emotions now excited in every breast. Great poems have been written and greater may be expected, which, in their turn, will doubtless inspire musicians, and we may look for still greater things in the future. As yet, however, they have not appeared, in this country at least, though it is said that in England music is being written by some one, of a name hitherto unknown, whose power of expression is unsurpassed by any one of our time, unless by Richard Strauss. Indeed, the individuality and character of this music is such as to lead those who have seen it to suppose that Strauss, having taken refuge in England, is continuing his extraordinary labors there under another name. It is known that he was opposed to the war and refused high honors offered him by the Kaiser if he would side with the Government in its declaration and prosecution of hostilities.

"American composers have had their thoughts turned away from the pursuit of their calling, the younger ones being engaged in war work and doing nothing of consequence; but it is to be hoped that their elders may keep alight the musical torch that so illumines the pathway of mankind.

"Whatever may be the trend of composition in America, it is very sure that 99 per cent. of the music of German origin, for so long heard in our concert rooms, will be conspicuous by its absence during the approaching season and for a long time to come.

"Even the best songs by the most approved Germans are being put aside, for the present at least, and in some ways this may be a good thing. It may serve to eliminate from our concert programmes much music which but for its foreign flavor would have been immediately recognized as being inferior, while a great deal that is eminently worthy of attention written by our own American composers, who for so long have been struggling from under the shadow of the German colossus, will now be brought forward.

"I am the last one, however, to advise the banishment of certain classics by a dozen or so of the great musical minds of the world merely because they happen to have been born from a century to two and a half centuries ago in a country with which we now find ourselves at war.

"But there is one thing in which American music is being greatly benefited, propaganda, but nothing else musical has thus far been unearthed which bears the stamp of present warlike inspiration. Let us wait patiently for the wonderful things to come.

and that is by the insistence upon the use of the English language instead of German in song. I have for years been an ardent supporter of our native tongue instead of foreign languages whenever such a course is practicable, and I shall be heartily glad if one of the results of the war shall be a careful study of English, both in song and speech. This is not such a small matter as may be supposed; the mountain is not laboring to bring forth a linguistic mouse; but this is only one of the results of the operations of nature, which affect art, and, indeed, pass all understanding."

Madame Matzenauer, another celebrated songster, has very optimistic expectations regarding the future of music as an outcome of the war. She says: "The results of the war on music will be wonderful, you may be sure. The spirit of song is ennobled by tragedy, by suffering, by sacrifice—by the emotions which stir the soul to its depts. The war has done great things for the cause of music. For that I am grateful, even though I bleed for the sorrow of those who must bear its hardest burdens.

"Entirely aside from the inspiration which it has given and will give to composers capable of handling great themes, just think of the wonderful concerts held in New York, Chicago and in all the large cities. The necessity of raising large sums of money to carry on the Red Cross work, cantonment work, and to stimulate interest in the Liberty Loan and War Stamp drives put singers everywhere on their mettle.

"Before this great need arose, the singer had nothing save love of work and a share of box office receipts to urge him or her to effort. Now it is the call of humanity that urges us to give all we can. We have redoubled our efforts. The public responded more than ever before, because all the great concerts and gatherings of artists were given in the cause of patriotism."

No doubt part of the future has been sensed by these great singers, but no previous war has been productive of many masterpieces during the time of fighting. After peace has been declared and the thoughts of composers, shorn of fervent patriotism, free from anxiety, and normal in every way, go back over the historical episodes, then the music of inspiration will appeal. We may expect in the future many wonderful symphonies based upon the events of this world's most horrible holocaust.

No piece of merit has yet shown its head above the musical surface, and even in the popular field there has been only one real war song written during the war, for the war, and recognized as a wartime success. George M. Cohan's "Over There" stands out preeminently as the one musical number which has been inspired by the fighting armies in France. Many others have been written before the commencement of hostilities and adapted for patriotic

Channon Music Company Sees Big Field in Picture Music

THE Channon Music Company, with offices at 701 Seventh avenue—owned and managed by musicians, and for musicians—enters the music publishing field with much in its favor. F. C. Collinge, the owner, is a musician, and saw the possibilities in securing the services of Mr. Baron on his staff of music writers. The name of Maurice Baron is well known among players of good music, for many compositions of merit are to his credit.

Although a young firm, the Channon Music Company has placed on the market some fine orchestral selections, such as "Little Girl of Mine," a fox trot; "Where the Moonlight Shadows Play," waltz, and another favorite called "Your Smile."

The latest offerings are "Mamselle Caprice" and "Moonlight Shadows." These numbers are wonderfully adaptable for scenes in a bright picture, and being new should appeal to the orchestra leader strongly.

Mr. Collinge is well and favorably known in the theatrical world as a composer and manager. He has arranged many musical shows and made special orchestrations for some of our best known stars. There is no question about his musicianship, and the merits of his work should carry him far on the road to success.

Grind Organ Accompaniment at Rivoli.

An amusing accompaniment to the symphonic poem, "Iderle," by Liszt, was heard at the Rivoli during the week of December 8. The opening adagio movement had hardly commenced before the strains of a grind organ were heard above the bassi passages. During the pauses, the hurdy-gurdy stood out in bold relief and contributed a piece of humor that was not originally intended for the patrons of the Rivoli Theatre.

In spite of the diversion, the orchestra played the overture commendably. Mr. Rapee likes Liszt, and is more at home than usual in the works of this composer. The poem is extremely difficult in execution and a little too "heavy" for the average patron, but this is not a fault, for the best music only should be offered, whether it is understood or not. Musical education is to be found in picture theatres these days, and it is well that such is the case.

Emanuel List tried to sing "Little Grey Home in the West." We regret to state that his efforts proved a failure. He did not sing it; he bellowed the notes, but gave no indication of what he meant. His English enunciation is extremely faulty and he cares not where he breathes.

"Un peu D'Amor," by Silesu, sung by Madeline D'Espinoy, proved pleasing for more reasons that that it was well sung. In the first place, the setting showed the half moon and the stars, so the singer seemingly sang from the heavenly firmament. This picture suggested what was to follow in the opening of the feature, "Under the Greenwood Tree"; secondly, the song itself breathed the spirit later found in the feature, and thirdly, it proved a wonderful introduction to Elsie Ferguson's great picture.

Before closing, we are glad to again praise the wonderful synchrony of the performance. The music at the Rivoli and Rialto always "comes out" right on the cue, and the key sequence is perfect.

Knowing the difficulties of such a feat, and in the spirit of the friendly critic, we have frequently hoped some one's foot would slip and a jarring note crop up to disturb the smoothness, but happily we are always disappointed. Nothing ever happens to break the musical continuity of the Rivoli picture presentation. We cannot speak too highly of this particular feature of the music, and sincerely hope every exhibitor in the country will follow Mr. Rothapfel's example.

Take care of the details of your performance and the show will take care of itself.

PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL of PICTURE PLAYING

Strand Theatre Los Angeles

Score for "The Girl of My Dreams."

There will be a music score available for "The Girl of My Dreams," released by The Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. George Beynon, the recognized authority on music for the picture, found in the Billy Rhodes feature a fitting vehicle for new music. The selections that are to be found on every leader's shelf have been given the congé, and excerpts from "Philemon et Baucis" have replaced them.

William Stickles, the well known composer, has written a number that fits the personality of Miss Rhodes and correctly interprets her character. This is the theme found in major and minor moods throughout the score. Mr. Stickles calls it "The Girl of My Dreams," and later promises to secure suitable words for a song, using the orchestral melody.

The score may be obtained from the exchanges of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and should provide variety of color to its auditors. The musical score is certainly the thing these days, and every leader should avail himself of this opportunity to take a rest from his routine labors of setting the picture.

"Silver Threads Among the Gold."

"Silver Threads!" you recollect it?
I'll just bet a dime you do;
Trouble comes—I don't expect it;
Soon it has me pretty blue;
To my phonygraft I wander
An' I hear that good old song;
Takes me once again back yonder,
An' old Trouble goes along."

A little poem beginning with the above verse appeared recently in one of the New York papers. It expresses so eloquently the sentiment of all who have heard—and who has not?—this heart-stirring song—that we are quoting it.

Practically all our American songs have been conspicuous from the lyric standpoint. "Silver Threads Among the Gold" is an exception; for, aside from stating that the words were by Eben E. Rexford, the facts concerning the life of the musician alone will be considered.

Hart P. Danks, who became a well known and successful song composer, was born in New Haven in 1834. When he was but eight years of age, his parents removed to Saratoga, N. Y. Even as a mere child, he evinced a keen interest in music and was placed under the instruction of Dr. Whitney, a Saratoga physician, who was also an excellent amateur musician. The boy made such strides in his studies and had so good a voice that he was soon placed in the choir of the First Presbyterian Church, where he sang a solo the first Sunday—an almost unprecedented honor. In a few months he acquired the reputation of being the best music reader in Saratoga—all this before he was fifteen.

In 1850 the family removed to Chicago. In the meanwhile the voice of the boy had changed to a deep bass, and he had no difficulty in obtaining a choir position. Also by this time his natural ability for musical composition began to assert itself.

So far from being pleased at the talent displayed by his son, Mr. Danks, Sr, considered it as a weakness and put the young man to work at his own trade, that of a builder.

Fortunately, soon after this, William Bradbury, then a musical celebrity, presided over a convention in Chicago. Young Danks, whose life was centered in music, attended. He was impressed by the personality of Mr. Bradbury and believed his time had come to emancipate himself from the hated carpenter's bench. He accordingly presented to that excellent artist a copy of his first hymn tune, which he modestly asked to have examined and passed upon as to merit. Mr. Bradbury was so pleased with the melody that he accepted it and inserted it in his next book of sacred songs, under the name of "Lake Street." This event decided the future of Mr. Danks. He devoted himself to music study and composition.

In 1856 his first song arranged for piano, "The Old Love," was published, and in the same year "Anna Lee" was put out.

He removed to New York in 1864. Up to this time he never received remuneration for his compositions. But he decided to adopt a new system, and was soon in a position where paying publishers sought him.

"Silver Threads Among the Gold" was published in 1872. Over three hundred thousand copies were sold in this country alone, and it had almost an equal popularity in England.

Like most composers, Mr. Danks deplored the taste of the public. Those songs which he considered his best efforts were less known and less appreciated than others which were dashed off at a sitting and upon whose popularity he did not build.

He worked on untiringly and with great attention to detail as he knew it. His compositions embraced both secular and sacred pieces and were so prolific that in some years they numbered over fifty publications. It is a bit surprising that he achieved so marked a degree of success, as he never had a teacher. But he always attributed his good fortune to conscientious study and indefatigable labor. While never aspiring to be ranked as a great musician, and always conscious of his limitations, his work was of average merit, freely flowing and much appreciated by the people of his time.

Q—Our manager insists upon projecting the picture at the speed indicated in the cue sheets, and says that is the way the producer wants it run. Sometimes there is an indication of eleven minutes to the 1,000 feet and the characters race through the performance. What about it?

A—When the musical arranger views the picture in a projection room, it is frequently run fast, and the duration of scenes are comparatively short. He realizes that his timing is faster than ordinary theatre speed, and gives the ratio of eleven minutes to the 1,000 feet in order that the leader in selecting his music will extend a scene of two minutes to 15/11 of 2, which would be 2 min. and 43 sec. It has nothing to do with film projection.

HULSEY COMPLETES BIG THEATRE PLANS

With Embargo on Building Lifted Texas Exhibitor Will Commence Construction of Large Picture House

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

WITH the cancellation of all building restrictions, following the cessation of hostilities, the Southwest is on the verge of a theatre building era which will make this section of the country second to none when it comes to spacious and modern motion picture theatres.

Many of the large Texas amusement companies and individual theatre owners are planning either to remodel and enlarge their buildings or erect new structures.

The day that building restrictions were removed in Texas E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, announced that he had completed all arrangements for the construction of the largest motion picture theatre in the state at Houston. This theatre will cost about $250,000 and will seat 2,500 persons. It is to be located on one of the busiest corners of the city on Main street. Construction work will commence the first of the year.

Mr. Hulsey is back from Washington, where he saw Jesse Jones, Houston capitalist, who is now a Red Cross executive. He reported that he had closed the deal for his theatre site and that no further obstacle was in the way. Interior decorators and sculptors of note will be retained to make the play house one of the most artistic in this territory.

Mr. Hulsey has planned to allow the people of Houston to christen their new theatre. He will stage a big voting contest through the newspapers of that city.

The construction of the new Hulsey Theatre at Houston will mean that E. H. Hulsey is the owner of eleven big motion picture theatres in Texas and the largest individual theatre owner in the Southwest.

Reports Business on Texas Border Good.

J. B. Dugger, of Vitagraph, has just returned from a trip along the Texas border, visiting El Paso, Laredo and Brownsville. He reports that business there shows signs of improving and that should the war department decide to open the border clear along the Rio Grande that things will be on the boom in this district.

The international bridges at present are fast closed by military guards of both nations. A passport is necessary to go into Mexico. The opening of the border would mean that business in all the larger border towns would pick up with a jump and that the big winter tourist population would return.

"Eye for Eye" Plays to Big Business.

Right on the heels of a house record established by Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" at the Old Mill Theatre, Dallas, comes another run of unprecedented business for this Hulsey house with Nazimova in "Eye for Eye." Manager Herschel Stuart reports that next to the crowds seeing Chaplin, Nazimova in her new feature has been the best drawing card of the year.

Theatres Near Small Camps Will Close.

With the closing of many of the smaller army camps in the southwestern territory, quite a few motion picture theatres which have sprung up on the outskirts of these military communities will shortly be forced to close their doors. Motion picture exhibitors in the larger cantonment cities also expect a falling off in their business. Such a decrease they believe will be temporary and will be counteracted when soldiers return to civilian life and business in general gets back to normal.

Cleveland Trade Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 206 Slogan Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Exchange Resembles Army Camp.

THE Standard Film Service Company's Cleveland exchange looks like an army camp these days. Louis W. Grenstine is back on the job again and you will also find Secretary-Treasurer M. A. Lebensburger, also a lieutenant there. Mr. Greenstine formerly was manager at Cincinnati.

In addition Joe Kremitz, formerly with Kleine, is back from Camp Sherman and working for the Standard.

All of them look fine, feel fine and have plunged into the film business again just as though they would embrace a long lost brother.

Neubler Gets South American Post.

Elmer Neubler, assistant manager of the Cleveland Fox Exchange, has been appointed assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation for South America.

This position was tendered him by W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Corporation, while on an inspection visit in Cleveland last week.

Neubler will leave for South America January 15, spending two weeks previous to this in New York. His address will be in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

The Cleveland Service Company has reopened the Cleveland, Warren, Niles, Youngstown messenger route, recently abandoned by another company. This company is composed of Lou Gross and Bobbie Page, two young men who have been handling city messenger service in Cleveland for two years. They are located at 301 Belmont Building.

Clearing House Opens Cleveland Branch.

The Film Clearing House, Inc., has opened its Cleveland branch in the quarters formerly occupied by George Kleine in the Cincere Building. Bert Barnett, formerly manager of the Barnett Film Atractions, Cleveland, is the manager.

Mutual to Show Cannibal Pictures.

Manager Latterner, of the Mutual Exchange, Cleveland, shortly will have a private screening of Martin Johnson's cannibal pictures. According to reports from the east and Canada, these pictures are making as big a hit as the first submarine pictures.

Ohio Brevities.

E. E. Blair has been discharged from Camp Knox, Stithton, Kentucky, and goes back to manage the Fayette Theatre, Celina, Ohio.

Walter E. Lusk, manager of the First National, Cleveland, has just returned from a trop to Cincinnati, where he appointed R. H. Haines manager of the office there. Mr. Haines is the proud papa of a baby boy.

W. H. Dietz Obtains Divorce.

TAKING advantage of a trip to Spokane from Mare Island, Cal., with the United States Marines football team, W. H. (Lonestar) Dietz, famous football coach and well-known moving picture actor, appeared before Superior Court Judge Hugo E. Oswald November 30 and obtained a divorce from Angel Decora Dietz, who resided in Carlisle, Pa. He declares she declined to come West, where he had made a home for her.

New Yorkers Praise "Fools' Gold."

Fred K. McBroom, receiver of the Washington Motion Picture Company, which produced "Fools' Gold," under the direction of Larry Trimble, returned November 28 from the East and reports that at a private showing to exhibitors in New York the men showed enthusiasm and praised the picture. Arrangements have been completed for marketing the film, according to Mr. McBroom.

Rex Changes Its Policy.

Manager C. E. Stilwell, of the Stilwell Theatres Corporation, changed his program of all pictures at the Rex Theatre, to include three vaudeville acts with each performance, and the remainder of the program of pictures with matinees only.

SAYS OLD TYPE THEATRES MUST GO

Texas Exhibitor Expresses Opinion That Primitive Structures Must Vanish in Face of Modern Ones

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

THAT the motion picture business in South Texas is in its infancy and that old-type small theatres must vanish to give place to the modern spacious and up-to-date playhouses are opinions expressed by J. I. Pittman, president of the Jefferson Amusement Company, of Beaumont, and owner of five theatres in Beaumont and Port Arthur.

Mr. Pittman, who is the largest exhibitor in South East Texas, practices what he preaches. On November 9 he opened the new Liberty Theatre at Beaumont, a $75,000 theatre, seating 1,200 persons, and which is equipped with a $10,000 pipe organ.

When Texas went dry six months ago Mr. Pittman secured two choice saloon locations on main streets in Beaumont and Port Arthur. He remodeled them into ideal theatre buildings. He reports business unusually good in South East Texas despite the influenza. "Hearts of the World," at the new Liberty, at Beaumont, early in December established a house record.

Dallas Soldiers to Get Old Jobs Back.

With scores of boys in khaki returning from their demobilization points, faces which have been absent from Dallas film row for many months are beginning to appear once more.

Film exchange managers are without exception finding places for the men whose absence has placed stars on the office service flags. In the majority of instances girls have been employed temporarily to fill the places of men going into army or navy service. Many of these will be retained and the soldiers given back their places, too.

No Abatement in War Camp Entertainment.

George Fuller, director, and J. L. Butterfield, general secretary, of the Community War Camp Motion Picture Service, were in Dallas during the second week in December visiting film exchange managers.

The demobilization of troops in southern training camps makes the continuation of the community service all the more important, and they are mapping out programs and bookings for some months to come. The army camps in Texas and Oklahoma will be kept full of returning troops for a long while, and there will be no abatement of the entertainment programs.

Texas Short Items.

Jack Lilly, manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, at Commerce, Tex., has returned to his post. He has been in the officers' training camp at Camp McArthur, Waco.

Charles Osborne, who went to an officers' training camp, is now back with Vitagraph, Dallas.

Al Glickman, formerly with the Dallas office of the World Film Corporation, is back home, having been mustered out of the army.

Manager Le Roy Bickel, of Metro, Dallas, has been ill with a light attack of influenza.

Manager Ned Depinet, of Consolidated, Dallas, spent the first week of December in bed with the influenza.

A. J. Nelson, of the New York offices of General, has been paying Jimmy Kelly a visit while on a Southern inspection tour.

Manager Lew Remy, of the Dallas Goldwyn office, is home sick in bed. He was taken ill while on a trip to Oklahoma City.

S. A. Lynch, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, is visiting Dallas during the second week in December, making one of his regular inspection tours of his branch offices.

Exhibitors Visiting Dallas.

Among the exhibitors who visited Dallas during the first week in December were J. H. Hauber, Hauber Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark.; Miss E. Johnson, Liberty Theatre, Houston; J. J. Hegeman, Crescent Theatre, Temple.

Indiana Trade Letter

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

Circle Theatre Entertains Newsies.

THE actual appearance of the American soldiers in France could have brought little less enthusiasm than was expressed in the cheers and whistles of about 1,800 carriers of The Indianapolis News, who were guests of the management of the Circle Theatre recently at a special showing of the official Government war film, "Under Four Flags."

Photographs of the American marines at Chateau Thierry were cheered, and whenever Old Glory was flashed on the screen there was no limit to the volume of cheers and whistles. Nor did the newsies forget to honor the flags and soldiers of the Allies, but quite naturally they had to extend themselves just a little more for Uncle Samuel.

Before the show opened, S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the theatre, was introduced by George Schmid, circulation manager of The News, as one of the best friends the newsies had. This was followed by a voluminous outburst of enthusiasm, which was accepted by Mr. McCormick as an expression of appreciation by his little friends for his generosity in giving them a "free show."

Donates Theatre to Red Cross.

Judgment Closes Grand Theatre Suit.

Some time ago the Thompson-Tyler Company, operators of the Grand Theatre, brought an action against the Central Presbyterian Church and George B. Garrison, a contractor, for damages to the extent of $25,000, which the theatre suffered, it was claimed, on account of scaffolding and other structural work being erected too near the theatre. The picture house management believed the work which this downtown church was doing in remodeling a building for Sunday school and social service seriously hampered the attendance at the theatre. As the theatre failed to push the matter a judgment has been entered in Equity Court which closes the incident with nominal costs.

FREE SHOW FAILS TO DRAW CROWDS

Public Refuses to Respond When Kansas City House Presents Battle Scenes Without Admission

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

THE public wants to pay for what it wants. The public shies at anything offered for nothing.

These facts were strikingly proved in Kansas City recently—much to the chagrin of a group of generous and patriotic citizens who thought they were conferring a favor on the business men and helping along a Government project.

The United War Exhibit was to open in Kansas City December 7. The local Chamber of Commerce was helping with the publicity. As one feature of the advertising there was a moving picture display of war scenes, in which appeared the items to be seen at the exhibition. The Chamber Committee wanted to get the best results from these pictures, so they asked G. W. Curtis, proprietor of the Doric Theatre—Mr. Curtis knowing everybody and also being known by everybody for his generosity—to allow them the use of his theatre for the pictures. He turned the house over to them, without restrictions and at no expense to them for the morning; the show was to occupy an hour. The committee used large newspaper space to advertise the show, and most business men saw the ad, a fact that was especially noted, because comment was made on the fact that such an exhibition was to be given at a theatre in the very heart of the office-building district. The advertisement said "Admission free." There were eighteen persons present at the showing of the picture. During the same day hundreds of business men paid to see much the same thing elsewhere.

Film Salesmen Preach Optimism.

Traveling men of the Universal office in Kansas City have been covering their territory while the latest influenza restrictions have been in effect, visiting the districts where theatres are closed, as well as those where theatres are operating. They are not only keeping in touch with exhibitors to help keep up the spirits of the men whose business is suspended, for the benefit of the Universal business, but are "missionaries of optimism," preaching the doctrine of better times coming.

"Our boys themselves have the conviction that the moving picture patronage will come back after the first of the year, stronger than ever, said Milton Feld, manager of the Universal office at Kansas City. "The boys will be coming back from the cantonments and from various war enterprises; the people will be eager for some relaxation.

"But most important will be the approach and the final accomplishment of prohibition that will affect many districts in the territory. The moving picture will be the logical means of securing amusement when the boys and men do not have opportunity to spend their time and money elsewhere, and there will be more money spent on the entertainment of the family. It behooves the exhibitors to get ready to care for the business—and to go after it strong, when the time comes."

Flynn Pays Kansas City a Visit.

John F. Flynn, the "grand-daddy" of Bartlesville, Okla., proprietor of the "Oklah" Theatre there, was in Kansas City recently, getting set for resumption of regular business. "Dad" Flynn, as he is known to men, women and boys in Bartlesville, had the first show in that town—upstairs, in a small room, nearly twenty years ago. The schedule of releases for the week was made up as follows: Monday, "The Volunteer"; Tuesday, "Shall We Forgive Her?", Wednesday, "The Tenth Case"; Thursday and Friday, "Woman of Redemption"; Saturday, "Broken Ties."

Manager Jennings made a special trip to Montreal in order to secure the bookings of these pictures for the week. With special newspaper advertising, the plan went over big.

Thanksgiving Day Service Held in the Rialto at Tacoma—Structure Filled to Overflowing

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

H. T. MOORE, the progressive manager of the Rialto and Colonial, the leading theatres of Tacoma, added prestige to his fine new Rialto and endeared himself to the most influential element of the city when he donated the use of the Rialto for a united religious service on Thanksgiving Day. Henry Spiller, well-known organist, who has charge of the big new Hope-Jones Wurlitzer at the Rialto, also donated his services for the occasion. The services were conducted by Bishop Frederic W. Keator, of the Episcopal Diocese of Western Washington. Talks were made by several notables, including one of the generals at Camp Lewis, the National Army Cantonment near Tacoma. The service was attended by all the higher officers at the cantonment, including General Cornelius Vanderbilt.

The theatre was filled to overflowing during the service, there being no standing room left in the aisles or in the foyer or in the balcony. At least five hundred persons were turned away. Mr. Moore received a letter afterward from Bishop Keator expressing his appreciation for the use of the theatre and calling particular attention to the wonderful acoustic properties of the house. Bishop Keator also wrote Mr. Spiller a grateful letter of thanks for his services.

To arouse and keep the interest of the responsible citizens of his city is one of the pet theories of Mr. Moore's method of conducting business. He is a member of the Rotary Club and is closely associated with all municipal activities. He makes it a rule always to conduct his houses so that the most dignified citizens will enjoy the amusement offered. He has recently won over the Methodist minister by making a special point of sending him word when some pretty play like Marguerite Clark's "Prunella" is to be shown. Now the worthy Methodist preacher is as good a booster for Mr. Moore's houses as there is in the town, and another point which Mr. Moore considers in his forward-looking policy is that there may be some time when the question of Sunday closing may come up, and he will know that the ministers are on his side.

Schlaifer Buys "Me Und Gott."

L. J. Schlaifer has added the six-reel political satire, "Me Und Gott" to his list of productions for the Northwest. Takes Over Theatres in Albany.

C. F. Hill, manager of the Goldwyn Seattle office since its opening, has acquired control of the motion picture business in the town of Albany, Oregon, by buying both theatres there, the Rolfe and the Globe. Mr. Hill resigned from the management of the Goldwyn office recently to take charge of his business himself. He has been succeeded by F. M. Brockell, manager in Chicago for Paramount-Artcraft, and later for Goldwyn in St. Louis. Mr. Brockell is well known in film circles through the entire country as a high class business man.

Mr. Hill has been one of the best liked exchange managers in the Northwest territory, his straightforward business methods and his gentlemanly consideration of others having won him friends in every branch of the industry. His rise to a managerial position was rapid. Never having been associated with the film business in any way until the early spring of 1916, when he accepted a salesman's position in this territory for Paramount, he was made sales manager of the Seattle office in a few months, and nine months after entering the business was offered the management of the Seattle Triangle office. He remained with Triangle until he opened the Goldwyn offices in this city. He has the good wishes of the Moving Picture World correspondent and of all Northwest filmdom in his change from the distributing to the exhibiting end of the business.

Todd With Select.

L. A. Todd, formerly manager of the Seattle Parex offices, is now a salesman out of the Seattle Select office.

Eddie Polo to Arrive on December 30.

Word has just been received by W. A. Mead, manager of the local Universal office, that Eddie Polo, star of "The Lure of the Circus," will arrive in Seattle on December 30 and will appear personally at the motion picture theatres.

In connection with the recently announced separation of Hearst and Pathe interests in the news weeklies, whereby Hearst International News will be distributed from Universal offices, Mr. Mead announces that the local Hearst photographer for Seattle territory will be T. G. Randolph, and that about 300 feet of local news pictures will be taken each week and distributed throughout the territory. The fact that these news reels will be developed in Universal City, instead of their being sent back to New York, will insure more prompt release and make for greater news value.

It has been so arranged that the three news weeklies released through the Universal office will come at intervals during the week, one being released on Tuesday, one on Thursday and one on Sunday. These are the Universal Current Events, the Screen Telegram and Hearst International News.

Gilbert Heffron in Seattle.

Gilbert Heffron, who recently resigned from the management of the Missoula Amusement Company, of Montana, to locate in Seattle, is in this city now. Wounded Soldiers Entertained.

The exhibitors of this city are being called upon to assist the Government and the various charitable organizations in the showing of motion picture films. Last week Mr. Marceron, of the Dumbarton, in Georgetown, gave a special matinee for the wounded soldiers from Walter Reed Hospital and the soldier boys from Camp Leach. A number of Georgetown young women acted as ushers, and during the matinee they passed cigarettes and sandwiches, donated by local merchants, among their guests. The several hundred convalescents from Walter Reed Hospital were driven to the theatre in automobiles, parade fashion, supplied and driven by their owners.

Attendance was by invitation only.

There are many ways in which The World's Classified Advertising serves theatre managers and other individuals in the moving picture industry. The service is prompt and the appeal effective.

ALLEN THEATRE AT EDMONTON OPENS

Seats 1,100—Has a $15,000 Pipe Organ and a Big Orchestra Pit—Color Scheme is Rose, Gold and Gray

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ont.

THE doors of the new Allen Theatre, Edmonton, Alberta, were thrown open for the first time on Monday, December 2, with the presentation of Griffith's feature, "Hearts of the World." This house, which is the thirty-second owned or controlled by Jule and J. J. Allen in the Dominion, was started on August 2 last and, despite labor and material shortages, was opened exactly four months later.

The new house has a seating capacity of 1,100, with three groups of loge boxes at the rear of the one floor. There are one hundred loge seats altogether. The Allen stands on the site of the old Orpheum Theatre, hut the latter was completely effaced, along with a number of other structures, to make room for the new theatre. The Allen has a frontage of 75 feet with a depth of 150 feet, and the location is near the intersection of Jasper avenue and 101st street.

One of the features is a great concert organ which has over 1,000 pipes, costing $15,000. In the spacious orchestra pit there is also found a grand piano. There is also accommodation for an orchestra of twenty-five musicians.

The street front is almost severe in its simplicity, the only ornamentation being in the color of the brick. The interior of the house, however, is as brilliant as a bursting war flare. The general color scheme is a combination of old rose, gold and gray, with curtains and draperies to match. The interior layout follows the Roman ampitheatre style, the one floor sloping at an angle that permits freedom of movement and ease of gaze.

The staff of the new Allen Theatre consists of the following: The manager is Max Allen, formerly of Rochester, N. Y., who has been identified with moving pictures in Western Canada for the past seven years. He has been the manager of the Monarch Theatre, Edmonton, which is also owned by the Allens. C. C. Coleman is the assistant manager, Miss G. Allen is the treasurer, W. Allen the machanical engineer, E. Grace chief operator and A. Jackson house superintendent.

The musical director is A. Fratkin, who has a studio in Edmonton. He is a pupil of Professor Auer, of Petrograd, Russia.

The organist is William H. Tomkinson, who was the organist and choirmaster of the Knox Church, Edmonton, from 1913 to 1917. He was educated at Glasgow, Scotland, studying under B. W. Hartley, F.R.C.O., and J. W. Strachan. He was a church organist when he was but fifteen years of age, and he presided at organs in various Scottish churches until he came to Canada. In 1903 he gave organ recitals at the Glasgow exhibition. He has been in the employ of the Allens for the past four years. Mr. Tomkinson is a member of the executive of the local musicians' union and has an extensive teaching connection.

One feature of the opening of the Allen Theatre, the cost of which is placed at $150,000, was the publication of an "Allen Theatre Section" by the Morning Bulletin of Edmonton. Four whole pages of this section were devoted to a description of the theatre and to advertisements of the theatre and of local contractors.

The Committee of Sixteen, in Montreal, Quebec, which is leading a crusade against commercialized vice locally, has obtained a print of the "Fit-to-Fight" picture which has been shown at army camps throughout the United States. Announcement is made that the Montreal Y. M. C. A. has arranged for the showing of the picture to soldiers at the Red Triangle Hut, Dominion Square, at regular intervals.

The Committee of Sixteen also arranged for a private presentation of the release on Friday evening, December 6. Invitations were extended to five hundred citizens of Montreal, and the latter were required to make written application for an admission ticket for the performance. Only males were admitted to this show.

The Allen Theatre, Montreal, Quebec.

The cuts on this page illustrate the new Allen Theatre, which opened September 16, in Notre Dame de Grace, a residential suburb of Montreal. The Allen is one of the growing chain of theatres owned and operated in Canada by the Allen Theatrical Enterprises, with offices in Toronto.

The new theatre was under construction for over six months, and is modern in every way. It has a capacity of nearly eleven hundred, the seats being all on one floor, there being no balcony. The building occupies a lot with the frontage of eighty-five feet on Sherbroooke street and a depth of one hundred and four feet from wall to wall. It is constructed of rustic brick, and is as fireproof as it is possible for a theatre to be, being of steel construction, with cement roof and floor.

The exterior presents an almost severely plain appearance. There are two small stores on each side of the entrance. The lobby itself is quite shallow, and is divided by a double set of doors to provide against drafts during the winter. The interior decorations are carried out in old rose and ivory. The booth, which is exceptionally large, occupying the entire space over the lobby, is equipped with two Power's 6B projectors and a Hertner transverter. The throw is a little over ninety feet, an Acme gold fibre screen being used.

Veterans See Own War Film.

Veterans of the famous Twenty-second French-Canadian Battalion, Montreal, saw their own war film at a special performance at the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, on December 6. Invitations were extended by the management to all former officers and members of the unit in the city to attend, and about two hundred were present. They were escorted to the theatre by the band of the Second Depot Battalion. A feature of the evening was the singing of the "Marseillaise" by M. Louis Chartier, the French-Canadian baritone, and the military band also occupied the stage for a part of the evening for a special concert. The stage was decorated with the flags of the Allies.

In addition to the special pictures of the Twenty-second Battalion, a number of Pathe war picture were also screened. French military views were shown during the rendering of a poilu song.

Sturgess Gives Reception to Eddie Polo.

Eddie Polo, the star of many a Universal serial, got acquainted with the moving picture theatre patrons of Toronto, Ontario, on December 9, 10 and 11, when he made the rounds of various local showhouses. His coming was unheralded, but it was not long before the fans got wise to his presence in the city, and every theatre was packed to greet him. He made the start of his tour at the Imperial Theatre, 408 Queen Street East, and during the one evening he appeared at the Eclipse, Family, Melba, Ideal, and other houses, after which he was taken to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Sturgess, 36 Lockwood road, for a reception. Mr. Sturgess is the manager of the Imperial Theatre, and Mrs. Sturgess made a splendid hostess.

Among those present at the private reception were the following guests: Clair Hague, president and general manager of the Canadian Universal; Dave Stewart, a Hamilton exhibitor; J. R. McKinney, sales

Polo made an excellent impression at the various theatres on the three evenings. He brought with him a special one-reel picture of his own in which he demonstrates some of his stunts.

Defends Action of Censors on Fox Film.

Mayor LaVigueur, of Quebec City, recently made a complaint to the Quebec Board of Censors over the presentation of "Cleopatra," starring Theda Bara, at a local theatre. The matter was taken up officially by Sheriff Lemieux, of Montreal, who is the chairman of the Quebec board.

Sheriff Lemieux defended the action of the Board in passing the spectacle, and declared that the Board could not possibly be more strict in its decisions. The chairman pointed out that "Cleopatra" had been passed only after some one hundred eliminations had been made in the picture. He also gave the information that the feature had not been condemned in any Province of Canada, while it was also being shown in all parts of the United States, England and Australia.

Upon receipt of this communication, the Quebec City Council decided to take no further action.

"The Better 'Ole" Pleases Canada.

"The Better 'Ole" is truly one of the film sensations of the year in Canada. The English war comedy made good with a vengeance on the occasion of its first presentation at the Allen Theatre, Toronto, the ordinary engagement being extended to three weeks before the people began to be satisfied. The concluding showing was given on Saturday, December 14, after which the picture was sent out on the road for a long tour of Ontario cities. It is understood the feature will play a repeat engagement at the Allen later in the season.

Construction of Alhambra Theatre Started.

The most important trade news of the week from Toronto is that work has been started on a new theatre to be known as the Alhambra Theatre. The new house will seat 1,500 and will be located on Bloor street, near Bathurst street, where Jule and J. Allen are also just completing their large suburban house known as Allen's Bloor Street Theatre.

The syndicate behind the Alhambra are the men associated with Regal Films, Ltd., the Paramount Theatre Company, Ltd., the Regent Theatre Company and other interests. They include J. P. Bickell, a Toronto capitalist; N. L. Nathanson, managing director of the above companies, and W. R. Wadsworth, of Toronto. These men recently acquired control of the Strand Theatre, Toronto, which is to be remodeled throughout next spring. The Alhambra Theatre makes the fifteenth house on the chain controlled by them.

With regard to the Strand Theatre, which is one of three large downtown theatres of Toronto, it is intimated that the frontage of the house will be doubled and the seating capacity will be greatly increased. Property adjoining has been acquired for the purpose. Clarence Robson, formerly associated with the Mark-Brock Enterprises, will continue as manager of the Strand.

EXHIBITORS ENTERTAIN FRENCH HEROES

San Francisco Theatre Men Provide Amusement for 500 Veterans on the Way to Siberia

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

FIVE HUNDRED French aviators and expert gunners arrived in San Francisco recently on their way to Siberia, and were entertained during their stay at many affairs staged in their honor. A municipal celebration was held at the Exposition Auditorium, this having been arranged by a committee consisting of Supervisor Andrew J. Gallagher, Ralph Pincus, of the Columbia Theatre, and Leo Weinberger, manager of the Strand Theatre. Through the courtesy of President M. L. Markowitz and Manager Leo Weinberger of the Strand the visitors were entertained there one afternoon, the attraction being "Shoulder Arms," with Charles Chaplin. This travesty on life in the trenches created great merriment among the foreign visitors. Edward Rainey, secretary to Mayor Rolph, welcomed the aviators to the theatre, and paid a glowing tribute to the management of the house for its patriotic efforts. The visitors were also entertained by the management of the Rialto Theatre at a pre-view of the Government film "Under Four Flags."

Exhibitors Meet Affiliated Official.

C. C. Pettijohn, chief counsel of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which recently took over the Mutual Film Corporation, was a recent visitor in San Francisco and met the leading exhibitors of this city and the surrounding territory to explain briefly the new unit booking plan. The gathering was held at the local Mutual office, and in spite of the fact that the time for sending out announcements was short, manager Newton Levi succeeded in getting a representative assemblage. Among those who met to welcome Mr. Pettijohn at the gathering on December 2 were Eugene H. Roth, of the California and Portola theatres; Howard J. Sheehan and George Mann, of the Rialto Theatre; Louis Greenfield, of the New Mission and Fillmore theatres; Charles Frohman, of the Queen Theatre; Frank Levy, of the Royal and Polk Theatres; Aaron Goldberg, of the Peerless and Central Theatres; Joseph Bauer, of the Wigwam Theatre, and S. H. Levin, of the Coliseum Theatre, all of San Francisco; C. W. Midgley, of the American Theatre, Oakland, and the Alameda Theatre, Alameda; L. E. Lund, of the Broadway Theatre, Oakland; L. Levin, of the Regent Theatre, San Mateo; Charles Godard, of Godard's J Street Theatre, Sacramento, and James Beatty, of the Liberty theatres of Fresno and San Jose.

This was Mr. Pettijohn's first visit to the Pacific Coast, and he expressed himself as being greatly impressed with the scenic attractions, the exhibitors he met and with the excellence of the theatres. He declared that California exhibitors have a high reputation throughout the East and that he was glad to find them living up to it. Local theatres, he said, were not to be surpassed anywhere for size, beauty and the presentation of shows. His stay here was a brief one, and shortly after the meeting he left for Denver, by way of Salt Lake City.

Select's Business Climbs.

In spite of the fact that many theatres in the San Francisco field are still closed, the local branch of the Select Pictures Corporation is doing the best business in its history, and Manager H. L. Knappen is naturally quite elated. "The One Woman" is being shown at the T. & D. Tivoli Theatre with success. R. A. Brackett, for some time connected with the local office as traveling man, has been transferred to the Seattle branch and his place is being filled by M. E. Cory, until recently with Universal. Barney Bernard, another salesman, is recovering from an attack of influenza contracted while on the road, and expects to be around again shortly.

Motoy Films Booked at Emporium.

The Emporium, one of California's largest department stores, is featuring moving pictures in its theatre each afternoon, the entertainments being designed especially for children, and are given free of charge. The management has booked the entire series of eighteen Motoy comedies handled in this territory by the M. & R. Feature Film Exchange, and expresses delight with the way these are being received.

William Russell in Town.

William Russell, the American star, blew into town recently from the studio for a stay of a week or so. While here he appeared in person on the stage of the Tivoli Theatre, where one of his latest productions was being featured.

Theatre Sues for Influenza Loss.

Exhibitors in general are taking much interest in a suit that has been filed in the Superior Court to determine upon whom shall fall the burden of rental loss as a result of the influenza epidemic. The Palace Theatre Company, which controls the Casino Theatre, Ellis and Mason streets, is the plaintiff, and seeks to recover from the owner of the property the sum of $3,691.50, representing rent paid between October 18 and November 15, the period during which theatres were closed in San Francisco. In a few instances property owners have voluntarily offered to stand a part of the rental losses.

Theatre Men Help W. S. S. Drive.

Joseph E. Levin, manager of the New Fillmore Theatre, served as captain in the recent War Saving Stamp drive and succeeded in placing large quantities of stamps with people connected with the moving picture industry. Wallace Reid came up from Los Angeles to help out with the work and appeared at several out-door gatherings and at a number of local theatres.

New Hippodrome Opens Soon.

Rapid progress is being made on the construction and furnishing of the new Hippodrome Theatre at San Jose, Cal., the latest addition to the great chain of combination vaudeville and moving picture houses conducted by Ackerman & Harris, of San Francisco, and the opening date will be about the first of the year. There is a possibility that the house can be made ready in time for opening on Christmas Day, but this is doubtful. Sam Harris, of this firm, states that the San Francisco Hippodrome has done a capacity business since the reopening, but that business over the circuit is spotted, with some cities in the Northwest going into quarantine again.

California Enlarges Orchestra.

The California Theatre has enlarged its orchestra to thirty pieces and is making the musical part of the program a distinct feature, under the direction of Herman Heller. It recently presented for the first time in this city the "American Wedding March," by John Philip Sousa.

Brief Trade News.

The Standard Film Corporation has been incorporated with a capital stock of $20,000 by H. L. McAllister, C. V. McCann, R. A. Whitehead and W. J. Ashenbrenner.

The name of the Apollo Theatre, Market street near Sixth, has been changed to that of the Central Theatre.

The Lincoln Theatre has placed an order for a large Seeburg-Smith organ and this will be in place before the close of the year.

REVIVING SUSPENDED THEATRE PROJECTS

Edward Hart May Be First to Erect Big Picture House in Cincinnati Following Removal of Ban

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

ONE of the results of the coming of peace was the lifting of the embargo on building which has for over a year prevented all construction work not directly connected with the war; and as several ambitious theatre building projects have on that account been suspended, plans for reviving them immediately became operative. That which seems to be nearest to actual consummation is the often-reported plan for the construction of a large house on Fountain Square, which is the block on Fifth street, between Vine and Walnut streets. Edward Hart, a prominent business man, controls a substantial piece of property in this block which would furnish an ideal location for a moving picture theatre. In fact, two theatres, the Bijou and the Star, are already located in the block, and it is understood that Mr. Hart has been in contact with a leading contracting concern, discussing the project, for which plans were prepared over a year ago. Two other houses proposed are slated for Fourth street, which is now without any picture theatres, and for West Sixth, but these are in a somewhat vague state as compared with the Hart project.

Lithographing Plant Closes Temporarily.

A direct result of the influenza epidemic and its depressing effect on the moving picture theatres throughout this section was the closing a short time ago of the plant of the Donaldson Lithographing Company, in Newport, which furnished posters for the exhibitors and film men in a considerable district. Officers of the company stated that the widespread effect of the epidemic, which has raged without cessation in some sections ever since September, has shut down so many theatres that it was considered advisable to close until the epidemic passes on.

Tells of Work Done to Improve Conditions.

At a special meeting of the Film Exchange Managers' Association of the Chamber of Commerce held a short time ago, with a luncheon in the Chamber of Commerce dining-room, the members were addressed by S. E. Morse, president of the Cleveland organization of exchange managers. Mr. Morse explained fully the work which has been done by the Cleveland film men toward eliminating abuses existing in the industry, and toward improving some of the technical work of showing moving pictures, especially in the projecting end of the business.

Epidemic Closes the Family Theatre.

With the recurrence of the influenza epidemic the local authorities thought it wise to close the Family Theatre, Milford, Ohio, in order to avoid further spread of the disease. The closing of the schools and churches has also been under consideration.

BLAIR M'ELROY, of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, was in Detroit on December 12 and confirmed the report that his concern had been appointed sole representatives for the Ford Educational Weekly, and that they in turn had appointed Goldwyn to do the physical distribution. Under the new plan of distribution, which takes place January 13, 1919, the exhibitor is to pay $12 per year, or at the rate of $1 per month, which money goes to Goldwyn for its expense in making shipment, inspection, handling reports, etc. Aside from this cost the weekly is absolutely free, and is given to exhibitors regardless and independent of any program or features. Fitzpatrick & McElroy have their headquarters in Chicago, 202 South State street, and operate a circuit of twenty-two theatres in Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin. The firm comprise Kenneth Kitzpatrick and Blair McElroy.

Changes in Kunsky Theatre Managers.

There has been quite a change in the house management of the John H. Kunsky theatres, Detroit, as a result of the recent resignation of Fred M. Shafer at the Adams. Charles H. Darrell, former manager of the Alhambra, goes to the Adams, while Sid Lawrence, former manager of the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, goes to the Alhambra. Tom Moule will continue to manage and book the Washington and Madison theatres; D. C. Shook will continue at the Strand, while L. H. Gardner will continue to look after the Garden, Empress, Royal and Liberty. Mike Schoenherr is a permanent fixture at the Columbia, which is the Kunsky vaudeville house.

Changes in Staff at Paramount Exchange.

H. A. Ross, Detroit manager for Paramount-Artcraft, announces a shifting in his employes in view of certain necessary changes for the betterment of the exchange. Elmer Brient has been transferred from Detroit to the St. Louis exchange, where he will do sales work, as he did in Detroit. Edward Fontaine, recently assistant manager at Fox, goes to Paramount as supervisor of bookings, in addition to which he will occupy a new sales position to be created. T. J. Plank, a newspaper and advertising man for twenty years, and now advertising manager of the Logansport Daily Tribune, will be in charge of publicity and service departments at the Detroit Paramount Exchange, effective January 1.

Planning to Retire from the Business.

Morris and Tom Lynch, who operate the Catherine Duplex Theatre, Chene and Catherine streets, are planning to retire from the business. They were one of the pioneers in the motion picture exhibiting end of the business, having the third theatre in Detroit, on East Jefferson avenue, near the Belle Isle Bridge.

Madison Theatre Works Up Music Program

Music is playing a most important part in the weekly shows at the Madison Theatre, Detroit. Ward Johnson, the orchestra leader, is not only a thorough musician, but a showman as well, and he is injecting bits of specialties here and there that are proving the talk of the town among the lovers of first-run pictures. For instance, in connection with the Bruee Educationals shown each week at the Madison, he picks out something in the weekly that the orchestra can play to in addition to music by the organ. Sometimes he will have a trio of his musicians play an accompaniment to the scenic—anyway, he is giving the people of Detroit some real musical novelties.

New Prints of Jewel Releases Received.

W. D. Ward, Detroit manager for Jewel Productions, says he has just received brand new prints on every release. "Last week was the record for new business with Jewel pictures," he said. "'For Husbands Only' is booking exceptionally strong, and we are getting many repeat bookings on 'The Price of a Good Time' and all of our Jewel productions."

Improvements Made in General Exchange.

A. J. Reed, manager of the General Film Exchange in Detroit, has completely rearranged his exchange, and from time to time plans other improvements. The General is now releasing Sherry Pictures and Perfection Pictures, in addition to its regular line of features and short subjects. J. C. Sellars is assistant to Mr. Reed, and two salesmen are covering the state. Mr. Reed and Mr. Sellars take care of the sales in Detroit.

Broadway-Strand Has Novel Stunt.

Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit, has a novel scheme that is causing patrons to value the house programs more than ever. Each week every program is numbered, and the management announces a half dozen lucky numbers. Any patron getting a program with any number specified as the lucky one simply has to present it at the box office and get an admission ticket gratis.

Abandons Orchestra and Raises Price.

Jack Mowat, manager of the Lincoln Square Theatre, Detroit, has dismissed the orchestra, and is now using the organ exclusively. The same time he took this step he raised the price of admissions to 15, 20 and 30 cents, cutting out all 10-cent seats. Mr. Mowat says the new policy is working out splendidly, and nobody seems to have missed the orchestra, neither do patrons complain over the new prices.

Washington News Letter

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

Famous Players' Exhibition Room Opened.

THAT the new Famous Players-Lasky Corporation production, "The Greatest Thing in Life," is one of the most interesting and gripping features shown in the National capital was attested to by the group of men who were the guests, jointly, of Oscar A. Morgan, local manager for the company; Ben Rogers, of the Fox Film Corporation, and the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

The party was given by the correspondent of this paper, with the use of the film furnished by Mr. Morgan, to show his friends how comfortable a motion picture exhibition could be made when Mr. Rogers permitted the use of his new exhibition room for that purpose. It was the christening of this exhibition room, located on the third floor of the building housing the exchange, and, incidentally, so far as Washington is concerned, it was the premiere of the picture. George C. Shaffer, the Fourteenth street florist, sent a large vase of red roses to decorate the exhibition room.

Among those present were Representative Joseph Walsh, of Massachusetts; Frederick W. Dallinger, of the same state, who, as a member of the House Committee on Education and Labor, played so prominent a part in the defeat of the Hughes-Smith censorship bill; C. C. Dill, of Washington (state); Burton E. Sweet and Cassius C. Dowell, of Iowa. Louis Warner, secretary to Senator Weeks, of Massachusetts, was also among the guests.

EXPLOITING "LITTLE MISS HOOVER"

How Marguerite Clark's Latest Paramount May Be Advertised With Specially Devised Publicity Plans, Showing Newspaper Notices and Prepared Display

By Epes Winthrop Sargent and Walter K. Hill

THERE was a particular need for "food propaganda" when "Little Miss Hoover" was being prepared for the screen, and with the arrival of peace the need for food conservation, we are told by Washington, is just as pressing as in days of war. While there are absolutely no war scenes in this latest Marguerite Clark Paramount, there are remembrances of the strife which may now be looked upon without the strain of battle to intensify the meaning of the word "slacker."

Food made good the promise of victory, and food must still be saved to sustain life in the devastated areas swept by war, while the folks at home battle against the profiteers, skimping and saving to permit of export to the needy thousands left stranded by enemy depredation. On these advanced lines Marguerite Clark carries forward "Little Miss Hoover."

To aid showmen and their press agents in making the most of their immediate opportunity two representatives of the Moving Picture World "sat in" at a showing of "Little Miss Hoover" exactly as it will be released to exhibitors—and not entirely as set forth in Paramount's own press books. The material presented in the following "aids to exhibitors" has been especially prepared with the exhibitor's needs solely in mind.

Synopsis of "Little Miss Hoover."

From "The Golden Bird," a story written by Maria Thompson Daviess, the scenario of "Little Miss Hoover" was prepared by Adrian Gil-Spear. Under the direction of John S. Robertson, with an able company in her support, Marguerite Clark has prepared a screen drama plentifully tinged with clean comedy following this general outline as to plot:

That he might better succeed in his appointed task, Adam Baldwin discards his uniform and goes into Harpeth Valley to stimulate crop production under the urge of war necessities. In Harpeth Valley is located the Craddock Farm, in which Nancy Craddock holds half interest. She has lived in luxury with her grandfather, until at the time the play begins their Washington home is swept away by an unhappy turn of fortune.

On the day she learns the news of these reverses, Nancy has been enthused by a speech President Wilson has made urging food conservation. Later she visits a poultry show, purchases a dozen hens and "Golden Bird," a prize rooster, intending to start chicken raising as her "bit." These fowls she now determines to use as a basis of new prosperity for herself and grandfather, as she hurries away to Harpeth Valley and Craddock Farm.

Matthew Berry has repeatedly declared his love for Nancy, and at each proposal of marriage has been refused because he was not in a uniform. When the draft board turns him down, Matthew follows Nancy to Craddock Farm and becomes a workman that he may gain strength and "fatten up" to pass the army examination. There he finds Polly Beardsley, maid of all work, with whom he falls totally in love—without advising Nancy of his change of heart.

Adam Baldwin, the Government specialist, has, meanwhile, helped Nancy reclaim some of the "slacker land" by putting it to crops; aided her in building chicken houses and "runs," and, inspired by the girl, has led the lazy men of the neighboring village in a lively pursuit of agriculture. The war is "getting hot," and the other men finally question Baldwin as to why he is not in uniform. Under instructions not to disclose his identity, Baldwin suffers indignities that almost lead to a coat of tar and feathers for the mysterious young man. But Nancy, knowing of the move, warns him, and he makes good his "get away."

Later on at a meeting of the villagers at Grange Hall to hear a famous "Government expert" everybody is surprised to have Adam Baldwin appear as the chief attraction—Nancy being the most surprised of all. At the conclusion of a masterly speech urging food production and conservation, Nancy is unexpectedly hurried up to the platform as the heroine of Harpeth Valley, the fine showing of crops being credited to her enthusiasm.

In consternation, she runs out of Grange Hall and jumps into the family carriage. Matthew Berry follows her, bringing along the blushing Polly Beardsley, and, while Nancy sits in the carriage, Berry tells her something he has long wanted to say (but she would not permit him to utter)—that he loves Polly. Then comes Adam Baldwin to speak for himself, and so ends happily the story of "Little Miss Hoover" to be presented at the (insert theatre and date), with Marguerite Clark the star.

Shorter Synopsis for Program.

Marguerite Clark in "Little Miss Hoover" will be seen at (insert theatre and date) in a light comedy drama founded upon the need of food conservation. Two leading men and another pretty girl, Frances Kaye, will carry the heart interest through many engaging scenes. The story: Nancy Craddock has been left suddenly penniless by an unexpected trick of fortune, and, to support herself and grandfather, takes possession of a farm in which she holds half-interest with her uncle; raising chickens being her means to the desired end. Adam Baldwin, expert farmer, has been sent by the Government to urge an increase in the crops in Harpeth Valley. Food conservation is necessary to win the war and later feed the destitute in devastated lands. Nancy and Baldwin stir the farmers to spendid effort, but Baldwin ultimately gains the enmity of his fellow-workers because he is not in uniform fighting "over there." When Nancy saves him from a coat of tar and feathers, Baldwin leaves to not return until a famous agricultural expert is announced to make a great speech in Grange Hall. Baldwin is the lecturer—and Nancy falls into his arms to snuggle her head against his fine uniform.

Some Details in Short Paragraphs.

Hal Reid was known as a stage star in towns of every size throughout the country a few years ago. Not alone as star, but as author of "Human Hearts," he was known among the foremost American professionals. Then the scenes changed for him, and he undertook writing scenarios and acting in motion pictures. His latest work is in support of Marguerite Clark, who presents "Little Miss Hoover" at the (insert theatre and date). Mr. Reid plays the role of a Southern gentleman who has abandoned the cotton plantation and become a Northern farmer.

What will appear as an inconsistency in Marguerite Clarke's Paramount photoplay, "Little Miss Hoover," when it is presented at (insert theatre and date) will be her appearance in fine gowns and pretty neglige amid homely scenes "down on the farm." As Nancy Craddock, Miss Clark plays the role of a girl who has turned to chicken raising and farming to recoup her lost fortunes, and to sec a "country" girl in fashionable clothes while other women in her neighborhood wear the usual costumes of the hard working country folk might seem an inconsistency. But it must be remembered that Nancy is "Hooverizing" in food and everything, so she goes forward with farm life, using the fine gowns of fashion wherever she can make them fit in. And a prettier picture than Marguerite Clark in her many pretty dresses could hardly be imagined.

In making the scenes for "Little Miss Hoover," the Paramount photoplay in which Marguerite Clark will appear at (insert theatre and date), Washington was selected for authentic "shots" of essential scenes. The Maryland countryside also provided "locations" for the many rustic framings for innumerable scenes of pastoral beauty and vivid naturalness.

But the most popular scene in the picture is likely to be about the best moving picture that was ever taken of President Wilson making a public address. The President was "cameraed" while standing on a slightly elevated platform making an address to a large and very enthusiastic crowd. Those who have seen the picture and are familiar with President Wilson's gestures and attitude in making addresses declare that "Little Miss Hoover" brings him to the screen in his happiest and best light as a public speaker.

There is a scene in Marguerite Clark's presentation of "Little Miss Hoover" offered as the attraction at (insert theatre and date) that is sure to delight all beholders. It is one of the most unusual scenes ever embodied in a motion picture. As Nancy Craddock in this newest Paramount photodrama, Miss Clark has the role of a girl, once rich, who has suddenly been cast upon her own resources. To make money she enters the chicken business, buys incubators, establishes an elaborate plant (on credit), and soon wins success where so many others have failed. But the incident that is bound to create shouts of glee and pleasurable surprise is this: At a critical moment in the hatching, Nancy Craddock's incubator breaks down, and the girl takes the eggs carefully to bed with her. She wraps them in a bath towel, surrounds them with hot-water bottles—and falls off to sleep with the eggs under the bedding beside her. At early dawn she is awaked by young chicks running out from under the counterpane; rolling and tumbling over her face, and actively exercising their tiny legs. Miss Clark turns down Nancy Craddock's coverlets, and there is the cloth which had previously warmed the eggs moving and inundating with its lively collection of chicklets. There in the bed are shown "peeps" half out of the shell, with more of them "just out" and running over the coverlets and sheet. It is a surprisingly interesting novelty, sure to be remembered by everyone who sees Miss Clark in her latest photoplay.

So popular is Marguerite Clark that her managers are scarcely able to turn out pictures fast enough to meet the demands of the public for appearances of this favorite actress. Her recent marriage to a U. S. Army officer has excited further interest in her screen plays, and when she comes to the (insert theatre and date) in "Little Miss Hoover" her admirers will be delighted. For the Paramount Co., who now present her on the screen, Miss Clark has made more than twenty-five pictures—to be exact "Little Miss Hoover" will be her twenty-seventh issue in the Paramount series.

ADVERTISING ANGLES.

There are two large angles to be played up in this production—the star and the food propaganda. The production has been shown before the Food Administration, and cordially endorsed by that organization. Prominent mention should be made of this fact, but the more interesting angle to the public at the present time is the star; coming as it does on the tail of a long series of conservation pictures. At the same time make use of the propaganda angle, not alone in appealing to local boards and patriotic societies, but as the excuse for additional space in the newspapers. Point out to the editor that this is the first propaganda picture dealing with the need for conservation after the war. The picture has been adroitly retitled along these lines, and the propaganda is well defined, though it is made to appear as the motive for the plot and is not intrusive. Get such space for the star as your advertising entitles you to in the reading columns, and then start a drive for additional mention for the propaganda. The picture is pleasant and of interest, but it is rather light in weight, so do not make the error of advertising this as the best picture in which Miss Clark has ever appeared. If the story is not over-boomed it will give complete satisfaction, but if the audience is led to expect too much, it will be disappointed, and the play will not then seem to be as good as it really is.

Lay stress upon the fact that this is not a war picture, but a post-bellum story, a story of the moment, dealing with a situation more acute now than during the war, because of the natural tendency to lessen effort now that the stimulus of contest has been removed.

The picture was made in Washington and in the Virginia suburbs. Tell that it presents a charming picture of life in the shadow of the dome of the Capitol, and of that Maryland which has changed little since the war; a new locale to a photoplay. Tell, too, that it shows some striking pictures of President Wilson addressing an outdoor audience.

Get these facts over in your press stuff and advertising. In the advertisements play up Miss Clark's name heavily. The name will bring you more business than the propaganda, so play it up far more heavily, but connect it with the propaganda through Miss Clark's efforts as a chicken farmer. Make chickens your second keynote in your newspaper advertising. Try such lines as, "Did you ever raise chickens? See how Marguerite Clark made a real step-mother to a fancy brood in, etc." "Hens helped win the war. See them scratch in 'Little Miss Hoover'." "With eggs close to a dollar a dozen, why not adopt a hen? Marguerite Clark did in 'Little Miss Hoover' and made good. So can you if you take her tips. See how she did it." "Marguerite Clark loved all feathered things, but she didn't want to see the man she loved tarred and feathered. She didn't like that sort of feathered thing. See how it came about in 'Little Miss Hoover'."

For the Lobby.

Get the chickens into the lobby. If you can rent or borrow a hover, set one up in the lobby with some day-old chicks. You can get the chicks by mail. Most Sunday newspapers advertise these, or see a poultry journal or the country gentleman. You can sell such chicks as live after the showing. Set up the hover with a sign, "This is a chicken's step-mother. See what a nice step-mother Marguerite Clark made in 'Little Miss Hoover' (showing date)." Or get a setting of eggs in an incubator and set that in the lobby with a display card, "This is the way Marguerite Clark started to raise hens in 'Little Miss Hoover,' but see how they were hatched out. You never could guess." The live chicks will be far more attractive than the incubator, so use these if you can.

If you have a space in the lobby, set up a pen of prize winners. You can give them a prize if no one else will. In a rural or suburban community you can inaugurate a creditable poultry show with small prizes and several of them. Make it a free-for-all, or specialize in white leghorns if you think you can get enough. You can rent some birds if you live in the city. If you have a vacant store near by, hire that and hold the show there. If you can work in with the Red Cross, charge an admission for their benefit and let them work the papers for extra space. In the city theatres a pen of live chickens will be more of an attraction than a dozen six sheets.

Work on the line from the play that three birds won the war—the American Eagle, the Chanticleer of France and the humble hen. Show all three in your lobby, the first two on flag staffs. You can make profile birds for the staffs and gild them at a pinch.

If you cannot get hens, you can at least hire a couple of cases of eggs and show them under glass. Advertise them as eggs "from the Craddock Farm, Harpeth Valley, Md. Grown by Marguerite Clark."

Flank any of these displays with the one sheets showing Miss Clark and Mr. O'Brien holding hens. For outside work use the 24 sheets in preference to the sixes, which are not characteristic, but use some of the three. Both three and 24's are good.

Stunt Suggestions.

Instead of a billboard advertising wagon build a coop with chickens on a flat, and send this through the streets with banners reading, "See Marguerite Clark as a chicken farmer at (house.) She's some chicken herself. Don't miss this." Use the chicken one sheets on the sides, and instruct the driver where possible to stop at the curb for a few minutes to get a crowd.

Place pens of plain or fancy birds in store windows. You can get into the leading dry goods store if you go about it right. Use a sign, "These chickens are from (name of owner or dealer), but you should see the chicken family Marguerite Clark raised in 'Little Miss Hoover' at (house and date). See how she did it, then do it yourself. Down with the high cost of eggs."

If you have a dealer in poultry supplies in your town work in with him for window displays, lending him stills for an attractor. Make a special bid with helps for amateur raisers, and arrange with the dealer to take part of your space or to tie up with your space. Give him a slide as an inducement. Work the same idea with dealers in fancy stock, if there are any, with an appeal to see Marguerite Clark's five thousand dollar rooster.

If you can get a few musicians send the Harpeth Valley Band through the streets with placards. Dress them as rubes. Letter one of the cards, "This is the welcome Marguerite Clark received when she came to Harpeth Valley to raise chickens and save the country. She did both. See 'Little Miss Hoover' (house and date)." Have the band play discordantly. If you cannot get men who can play, perhaps you can dig up a kazoo band.

General Suggestions.

If you have a country trade make a special appeal to them with a mailing card, telling them to come and see how a city girl made good on a farm that had gone to seed.

Work slides a week ahead showing chickens. If you cannot get these ready made, get your local photographer to copy some from some poultry journal, which you can borrow from the public library or some fancier. Letter each with a description of the bird shown, and add, "But see Marguerite Clarke's $5,000 rooster in 'Little Miss Hoover' (date)." Let your pianist or drummer work the rooster crow while the pictures are being shown.

Turn a greased rooster loose in front of your theatre before the opening matinee or night show and offer a pair of tickets to the boy who catches it.

Advertise the feature well in advance, and you'll get a crowd.

Work on the editors of farm and garden departments in your local papers, as well as on the photoplay editors.

Hoffberg Renews Goldwyn South American Contract

J. F. HOFFBERG, general manager of the Co-operative Film Company, of New York, announces that his firm has renewed its present contract with Goldwyn for the exclusive distribution rights for the 1918-1919 productions, including all Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Rex Beach, Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore pictures, for territory embracing Chile, Peru, Equador and Bolivia.

The Co-operative also states that arrangements with their former South American representative have discontinued, and that they are now represented by Ataliver Zepeda, and also announces that in addition to the Goldwyn pictures it has secured some of the biggest independent specials on the market.

Mr. Hoffberg is of the opinion that the former control of the South American market held by European producers will never again be realized, and gives as his reason the fact that about ninety per cent. of the exchanges in that continent have solidly contracted for North American productions for years to come; further, that fifty per cent. of the exchanges are either American owned or have American connections. In substantiation of this contention, he points to the outcome of a popularity contest held by La Semana Cinematografica, of Santiago, where nine of the first ten leading actresses are American, and among the first thirty-three names only seven Italian, French or Scandinavian actresses appear. While Francesca Bertini, Pina Menichelli and Lydia Borelli will undoubtedly remain popular, he says, they will not reach the height of popularity enjoyed by Geraldine Farrar, Mabel Normand, Pearl White, Norma Talmadge or several other American stars, and that the same applies to male stars, of whom George Walsh is the most popular.

LIFE IN THE INDUSTRY.

Second Spasm of Our Serial.

By Joseph F. Lee.

SYNOPSES OF PRECEDING EPISODE.—O. Fuller Bull, general sales manager for a certain Fillum Company, has been knocked out of a foreign sale by another film promoter whom Bull had introduced to his own "prospect." The tricky cuss had induced Bull's customer to sign on the dotted line just at the moment Bull expected the Foreign Buyer to do the same thing on a contract that would invest the Hoboken and other Foreign Rights to "Skipped by the Light of the Moon."

Second Episode.

FOR thirteen seconds Bull sat with his clenched first resting on the desk blotter the Charter Oak Insurance Company had issued for other and such purposes. He had watched great captains of industry pose in the same attitude in various super-features many a time and oft.

Finally he broke his own silence; smashed it, utterly.

He thus raved:

"That's what you get," said Bull to "the best little stenographer you ever saw," while his eyes gleamed and his teeth flashed back the glint of the desk light he kept burning, even at mid-day, for atmosphere; "that's what you get for treating a customer right. I gave him the time of his young life—a ride to Grant's Tomb and a midnight lunch at the Automat. And now he's done gone signed the other fellow's proposition.

"I'm done. From this minute there will be no more attempts to do business in this office by bribes, or inducements."

Looking at his watch, Bull declared an armistice with business and sounded the lunch call. He was reaching for his cane and hat when his secretary dashed in with an "important letter."

"Whoseit from," said Bull.

"From an exhibitor—kicking," replied the secretary.

"You needn'ta said 'kicking'—they always are," said Bull, as he reached for the letter and read as follows:

"General Sales and Exploitation Manager; Dear Sir: Having a complaint to make I thought I'd write you these few lines as after playing your last feature I have just added up all of my bills.

"I followed to the letter (and postal cards) your exploitation plan. Just as you said I would, on your wonderful idea, I 'got them in'—but here's where I feel like loosening up a justified kick. The total postage on the letters and postals, for the whole outfit, was 12 cents.

"My opposition across the way (Athens Theatre) gives a twelve-reel show and charges 5 cents. When I had your other superfeature I tried raising my prices and all of my customers went to Athens.

"I was a long way back, and when I decided to play 'Skipped by the Light of the Moon' I decided not to raise prices.

"Well, after using all your booster ideas and paying the bills for printing, postage and renting your superfeature I figure that I did a 'helluvo biz'—but am $21 out on that day. You know, Mr. Bull, that this can't go on.

"You write such smart letters, and after looking at your picture in the trade papers, I wonder why you can't be such a brilliant fellow as you look and think up some slick stunts that won't cost more than three or $4—one that would pack my theatre all day and make the Greek across the way sore.

"Why not figure out a cheap stunt for one of your features you offer me for $12.50 a day rental. I figure out 'any darned fool can get them in' on your last exploitation plan, but someone told me once that a fellow 'who done a big business on some cheap, clean stunts was a showman.'

"I heard of a fellow who advertised: 'Come to Maxim Theatre and Hear the Singing Arc Lamps.' They say this stunt can be done for two or $3 and draws big. You seem to be a smart fellow, so mebby you can tell me how this 'Singing Arc Lamp' is done.

"Now something cheap like that would hit me right, and I'd play a lot of your $12.50 features or even some of your $15 superfeatures. Awaiting an early reply, I am, yours truly, Henry Shackomaxin, Somewhere, Nebr."

O. Fuller Bull tossed the letter onto the Charter Oak Insurance Company desk blotter and weighed it down with a petrified sea-shell Bull had picked up on the strand during a week-end at Long Beach.

"In spite of his nerve," said Bull, "I'll answer that fellow when I get back from lunch."

"Where'll I say you are," said "the best little stenographer you ever saw," as she looked up from a copy of the Moving Picture World, dated December 21, 1918, opened before her gaze at pages 1358 and 1359.

"Page me at the Astor," said Bull.

THE hand-written notes Dorothy Phillips sent to so many of us urging attendance upon her midnight tea party at the Broadway Friday evening of this week represent a new and clever idea in film promotion.

Personally, however, we shall never believe Miss Phillips wrote the clever little letter with her own hand—until she writes us another one saying so. We are such a case-hardened old hombre that we see the fine hand of press agentry everywhere we turn.

But for this once (because we have seen so many miles of films in which Miss Phillips has appeared with unvarying artistic success) we will add this much more to the leagues, kilometers and wots of words we have written about her to say that "The Heart of Humanity" will be thrown in for good measure with the eagerly anticipated cup of tea.

Comfort for the Superstitious

Found in the Ways of Wilson

MRS. RAMBLER has translated from Courier des Etats-Unis the following pertinent facts, high spots as it were, in the career of President Wilson. We present them for the encouragement and benefit of superstitious players, producers, publicists, directors, camera men, film cutters and salesmen who are part and parcel of THE industry. Woodrow Wilson

Arrived in France Friday, December 13.

There are 13 letters in his name.

There are 13 letters in "The White House."

He was elected Governor of New Jersey in the 13th year of his Princeton professorship.

His first nomination was achieved June 13, 1912.

He was inaugurated President for the first time in 1913.

There were 13 Governors present at that inauguration.

Military representatives from 13 States were in evidence.

Students of Princeton went to the inauguration in two trains of 13 coaches.

The marriage of his daughter was the 13th celebrated in the White House.

The names of the contracting parties numbered 13 letters—Jessie M. Wilson and Francis Sayers.

The United States was the 13th Power to enter the war against the Hun.

It Happened on "British Day."

INCIDENT to the presentation of "The Price of Victory," screened at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre Sunday evening, December 8, there were several speeches and a couple of vaudeville specialties. It was "British Day" and great was the Anti-Germanic enthusiasm. Captain Tupper, who came to America to tell of the hellishness of the Hun in their treatment of British sailors, told horrifying truths with great detail and earnestness.

And the orchestra played three German overtures while the film was being screened!

Thanks, Craftsman, for the Suggestion.

OVER at General Film headquarters they publish a weekly house organ for circulation among the employes all over the country. They call it The Voice of the General, or more briefly The Voice. It is edited by Fred Schaefer Evidently he gets a lot of fun out of it:

"My main idea is to make it interesting," he says, "and for this reason I try to get the various executives at the different branches to write contributions for it. Some, of course, are better at this than others, and some don't know what to write about. However, I manage to get a rise out of all of them in the end. If I don't hear from a man I just spell his name wrong in the paper, and he very quickly writes in about that."

Producers' and Distributors' News

Yank Doughboys Balk at Playing German Soldiers

WHILE taking the camp scenes for "Made in America," published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Ashley Miller, the producer and director, wanted to stage an attack which, for the sake of realism, required about 150 German soldiers.

He applied to the officers who had been kindness personified in supplying him details of all kinds, and volunteers were called for among the men of the battalion. But—there was a hitch! Nobody in the battalion wanted to "play German." After considerable effort twenty men were found who were willing to lay aside their scruples and don the hated gray uniforms.

It was a serious dilemma. Finally the director hit upon a solution. He requested that he might be allowed to address the battalion officers. The meeting was arranged, and after Mr. Miller had explained what the film, "Made in America," was going to mean and how the Government was co-operating in every way in its production and what it would mean to the folk back home, as well as to future generations, to have such a complete and accurate pictorial record of every phase of the soldier's training, the officers readily promised to do their utmost to win over the reluctant soldiers to wear the hated livery of the Kaiser.

They were successful, and enough volunteers were secured, and Director Miller was able to get a fine picture of an American attack with enough dead Germans around to make it realistic.

Miss Clark Finishes "Mrs. Wiggs."

Marguerite Clark, Paramount star, who will next be seen in "Little Miss Hoover," a release of December 29, has finished "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and has departed for parts unknown—on her long-deferred honeymoon. Although the dainty little star's marriage to Lieutenant H. Palmerson Williams took place last summer, the end of the war and the completion of the "Mrs. Wiggs" picture have combined to offer the couple their first opportunity for a real honeymoon.

Director Hugh Ford, who is now engaged in cutting and assembling the new film, is said to have made an exceedingly attractive production founded on the novel by Alice Hegan Rice, and the dramatization by Anne Crawford Flexner.

"Little Miss Hoover" is an adaptation of Maria Thompson Daviess' story, "The Golden Bird," which appeared as a serial several months ago. The scenario is by Adrian Gil-Spear, and John Stuart Robertson directed. Miss Clark is supported by Eugene O'Brien as leading man, and Alfred Hickman, Forrest Robinson, Hal Reid, Frances Kaye and John Tansaye complete the cast.

William Fox to Reissue Two-Part Mix Comedies

IN HIS TOUR of all the William Fox exchanges in the United States, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has found that one of the big difficulties confronting exhibitors is that of obtaining two-reel comedy subjects of sufficiently high quality. Conversations with numerous exhibitors have revealed also an unprecedented demand for all Tom Mix subjects.

Because of these factors the Fox corporation intends again to release the two-reel Tom Mix comedy subjects that went a great way to establish the fame of the player on its present solid foundation.

The releases will be started January 12, alternating with a Fox-Lehrman Sunshine comedy.

Five of the best Mix comedy subjects are now being retitled and re-edited for this series. They are "Hearts and Saddles," "The Roman Cowboy," "Six-Cylinder Love," "The Soft Tenderfoot" and "Tom and Jerry Mix."

Everything will be done to make these comedies even faster and more hilarious than they are now. In the re-editing, all material which would tend to make the subjects drag is being cut out.

Exhibitors Interested in U. S. A. Series.

Reports from the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information are to the effect that exhibitors are showing wide interest in the new U. S. A. series, the two-reelers prepared by the Government and released through World Film. It would seem that the exhibitors are wide awake to the fact that, although the armistice has been signed, interest in the war has not waned, and that the public wants to be informed on the more intimate details of what America did as its part in the conflict. Many facts in this connection, that were necessarily kept secret as long as the war lasted, are now to be given the public, and the Government has chosen this series of pictures as the most fitting and most interesting method of giving them to the people.

The first picture of the series, "If Your Soldier's Hit," will be released December 23. Bookings are coming in for the second picture, "Wings of Victory," and for subsequent pictures. The pictures of the series will be released at the rate of one every two weeks.

May Allison a Hoyden in "Peggy Does Her Darnedest"

MAY ALLISON has the role of a lovable hoyden in "Peggy Does Her Darndest," her newest starring vehicle, which has entered upon its third week in production at the Metro studios in Hollywood. For Peggy is an out-of-doors girl, fond of athletics and able to box, wrestle, ride or swim.

Miss Allison took a course of lessons in the "manly art" especially for this picture. From Danny Hogan, Metro's chief of properties, who, as "Kid" Hogan, fought many a ring battle, and from Bull Montana, athlete and esthete, Miss Allison derived special knowledge in the science of hitting, blocking and getting away.

The star proved to be an apt pupil. Dick Rosson, who plays Peggy's brother in the new Metro picture, and who has a brisk set-to with Miss Allison in one of the picture's many light comedy scenes, bears testimony to the fact that the dainty star carries a kick in either hand.

George D. Baker is directing Miss Allison in "Peggy Does Her Darndest." Baker also made the screen adaptation from a magazine story by Royal Brown. Robert Ellis is Miss Allison's leading man. Others in her support are Frank Currier, Augustus Phillips, Wilton Taylor, Dick Rosson, Rosemary Theby, Sylvia Ashton and Ernest Morrison, a colored child—a little bit of charcoal who plays "Snowball" Snow.

George Walsh Begins "Jinx Jones."

George Walsh, the William Fox star, has begun work on a Victory Picture under the direction of Edward Dillon. It bears the working title "Jinx Jones," and is being made from an original story and scenario written by Raymond L. Schrock. The picture is described as a rapid-fire comedy. This is the second picture George Walsh has made under the direction of Mr. Dillon.

Hodkinson Will Continue to Release Kerrigan Film

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that, contrary to the misunderstanding created by recent announcements, J. Warren Kerrigan features will be released solely by Hodkinson Service in the United States for the next year and a half.

W. H. Seely, of Robertson-Cole Company, in a letter of December 11, says: "We regret exceedingly that such an impression should have gone abroad and caused you any embarrassment. We hasten to assure you, however, that we have no part in this matter whatever; that we have even refrained from advertising the Kerrigan pictures in the foreign territory which we control since we entered into our contract with the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation.

"A careful perusal of our publicity and announcement of our releases will verify our statement that there has been no announcment emanating from us which could have been misconstrued in the manner indicated in your letter.

"In disclaiming any responsibility for this impression we are obliged to say that we do it regretfully, for we like the Kerrigan pictures and would be glad if we had them."

"The Drifters," J. Warren Kerrigan's newest J. D. Hampton feature, will be the first picture to be released on the Hodkinson program for the new year. Written by Kenneth B. Clarke, and personally directed by J. D. Hampton, "The Drifters" is an Alaskan story of mystery and romance. Following this, the star will appear in "Come Again, Smith," a modern-day comedy written by John H. Blackwood.

Brentwood Outlines What It Aims to Do.

The first picture of the Brentwood Corporation, "The Turn In The Road," directed by King Vidor, is a presentation of life with its humor and pathos, as it is known to the average American. There is no sex problem, no war problem, no sermonizing. It is a cross section of life of heart interest that shows the lesson of love and fearlessness in a direct and dramatic manner.

The story is simple and human; there are no heroics, no fireworks or wild splurging of fervid emotional stuff. The policy of the Brentwooders is to make safe and sane pictures that can be viewed by every member of the family with no danger to their minds and morals; pictures that will stir the emotions with stories of every-day life and its problems, every-day drama and every-day comedy blended together with strong dramatic action and interpretated by players of ability and reputation.

The Brentwooders are aiming to make pictures that will appeal to screen lovers as "The Man From Home," "Peaceful Valley," "The County Chairman," "The Fortune Hunter," and "Peg 'O My Heart," appealed to patrons of the regular stage.

Will Preserve Stills of "The Cavell Case."

Select Pictures announces that it has been requested by the historical branch of the War Plans Division of the General Staff at Washington to furnish a complete set of "stills" on "The Cavell Case" to be incorporated in the permanent records of the division. In making the request for "stills," Major Kendall Banning said:

"Would you be kind enough to send me a collection of 'stills' made from the feature, 'The Cavell Case'? I want unmounted prints to be incorporated in the perment records of the War Plans Division of the General Staff."

This is further illustration of the importance and timeliness of Select's special, "The Cavell Case," which picturizes the gallant life and heroic death of Edith Cavell.

Historic Settings for Artcraft's "Little Women"

WHAT press reviewers have already declared to be one of the most charming adaptations of well-known stories to the screen is "Little Women," from the famous novel by Louisa M. Alcott, which was produced by William A. Brady, and was recently purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for distribution. It will be released January 5 as the third of the series of Paramount-Artcraft Specials.

The four famous "little women"—Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy—are said to have been visualized with delightful effect, and all who have read the story will find the picture excellent. The photoplay presents every character of the novel, and all will be instantly recognized by Miss Alcott's admirers. Sweet, gentle Jo, whose sacrifice of her wonderful hair in order that her mother might have money for the journey to Washington to see the father lying ill there, is appealingly played by Dorothy Bernard. Meg, who marries John Brooke after she has waited while he fights the battles of the Union, comes to life in the person of Isable Lamon, with Henry Hull as Brooke. Beth and Amy are played by Lillian Hall and Florence Flinn respectively.

The scenes of the story were photographed in and about the old Alcott home, in Concord, Mass, where "Little Women" was written, and these lend great attractiveness to the picture. The home of Ralph Waldo Emerson is also shown, lending the production an added touch of historical and educational value. Harley Knoles, who directed the picture for Mr. Brady, provided a splendid cast of players to interpret the various roles, so that from this standpoint as well as all others the photoplay doubtless will attract widespread attention.

Two Fox Productions in One.

Two productions made for one release is the record established by "Woman, Woman!" the William Fox Standard Picture, which Evelyn Nesbit is making at the Willett studio at Fort Lee. One of the scenes in "Woman! Women!" shows a motion picture, "The Bride of Bushido." being exhibted on the screen in a New York motion picture theatre.

To obtain "The Bride of Bushido," Kenean Buel, director of "Woman! Woman!" was obliged to hire a company of players to portray Japanese roles, write a scenario that would convey a point necessary in "Woman! Woman!" and then stage "The Bride of Bushido," just as if it were one of the William Fox releases.

As if this were not trouble enough for one director, the Japanese actors went on strike in the middle of the filming and thus tied up not only "The Bridge of Bushido," but "Woman! Woman!" An adjustment of the wage schedule, however, soon got both plays under way again.

Greater Scope for Screen Magazine.

The new year will bring with it several changes in the construction of Universal's Screen Magazine, an independent weekly release that has become popular with theatregoers during the three years of its existence.

In the future the reel will be made a composite of newspaper and magazine pictorial feature sections, combining art, science, horticulture, agriculture, floriculture, mining and other features with humor, thus making the educational subjects more enjoyable. Jack Cohn, editor of the Screen Magazine, has been preparing the plans for the new issues for six months, and he has secured the right to photograph many subjects heretofore never brought before the lens.

In addition to making improvements on the Screen Magazine itself, Universal has secured the co-operation of many of the leading newspapers in various sections of the country, and these newspapers will aid exhibitors in boosting business on the subject.

Roscoe Is "Camping Out."

Fatty Arbuckle, in his new Paramount comedy, "Camping Out," portrays the woes of a neglected married man whose wife won't even keep house the way it should be kept. So he leaves sadly and goes to Catalina Island to camp out. On the boat he meets a woman who is just his idea of what a housewife should be, but alas, she is married. Therefrom dates a story of the most wildly humorous character imaginable, it is declared, with lovely Catalina Island as a background.

Arbuckle has been in San Francisco, but has recently returned to work. He has acquired a new studio opposite the Mack Sennett studios in Los Angeles, which has every facility for his work.

"The Lion and the Mouse" to Be Released in February

THE full cast for the Vitagraph production of "The Lion and the Mouse," in which Alice Joyce is to be featured, has just been announced. Miss Joyce will play the role of Shirley Rossmore; Anders Randolf will play John Burkett Ryder; Mrs. John Burkett Ryder will be played by Jane Jennings; Conrad Nagel will play Jefferson Ryder; W. T. Carleton will be seen as Senator Roberts; Mona Kingsley will play Kate Roberts; Henry Hallam will play Judge Rossmore; Mary Carr will be seen as Mrs. Rossmore; William H. Burton plays ex-Judge Stott, and Templer Saxe will be seen as the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley. The production will be directed by Tom Terriss, who has directed the Alice Joyce productions for many months past.

The date set for the release of the picture is February 10. It will be the third of the Alice Joyce star series now being released under Vitagraph's new booking plan and policy. Miss Joyce's first production under the star series plan was "Everybody's Girl," which was released November 18; her second production, "The Captain's Captain," will be released on December 30.

"The One Woman" (Select).

When Thomas Dixon, who is also the author of "The Birth of a Nation," wrote "The One Woman," he had in mind one of his former close associates in the ministry who divorced his wife in order to enter into a marriage by proclamation with a woman who financed his new free church. At that time Mr. Dixon was a clergyman of the Baptist Church. Fearing that the germ of the so-called new thought and emancipated womanhood might assume dangerous proportions, he set himself to the task of writing a drama-novel for the purpose of illustrating the folly of the new movement. How well he succeeded is evidenced by the sale of his story, "The One Woman," which, in addition to being a Select Pictures special, is in its seventh or eighth edition as a book.

"The One Woman" and the lesson it teaches is a powerful enemy to the decree issued by the Vladimir Sovict of Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies of Russia, which recently authorized a government bureau of free love.

"Dolly's Vacation" Is Praised.

The private showings of "Dolly's Vacation," starring Baby Marie Osborne, and which will be released by Pathe on December 29, have elicited warm praise from literary critics, especially those interested in the study of child life. Mary Edith Butler, author of "The Rose Behind the Wall," calls it "a magically stimulating draught from the fountain of youth."

George Arthur Gray, magazine writer and expert on child psychology, after having witnessed Baby at work in the Diando studio, says that the little star is, in many ways, a remarkable youngster, combining all of the freshness and charm of youth with a certain touch of maturity, which is irresistible in its appeal.

Who's Who in Arden Film, "The Challenge Accepted"

ZENA KEEFE is the star of "The Challenge Accepted." She is a sparkling, brown-eyed, dark-haired girl who delights in skating, skiing and swimming, as well as milder forms of outdoor sports. Edwin L. Hollywood is the director. Chester Barnett is the leading man, and he is as good a musician as an actor. John Hopkins plays the villain. He is also an author. Sidney D'Albrook is another villain, and he, too, writes.

Warren Cook comes from Boston. You'll like him as the kindly captain. Charles Eldridge is a nice old screen daddy. He used to play with Zena Keefe at Vitagraph long years ago when pictures —and Zena—were young. Russell Simpson is one of the best character men on the screen and one of the most loved. Joel Day is another character man.

Donald Gordon Reid wrote the story. He was formerly connected with the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is the distributor of "The Challenge Accepted," which is the first production of Arden Photoplays, Inc.

Walthall Has Leading Role in Vance-Ince Spy Drama

THOMAS H. INCE'S production of Louis Joseph Vance's thrilling story, "The False Faces," in which Henry B. Walthall plays the leading role at the head of a splendid cast, will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft Special January 12. The production was directed by Irvin V. Willat.

Nobody who read Vance's first story of the fascinating French crook, "The Lone Wolf," will wish to miss the picturization of the second tale dealing with his exploits, the distributors declare. Yet this interesting character is no longer a crook, but an intelligence officer in the Allied service.

Mr. Walthall's work, in his own distinctive style, is said to be as good or better than anything he has heretofore done.

"What Shall We Do with Him?"

The advertising possibilities of the McClure-World Picture special, "What Shall We Do with Him" should do much to make this timely feature a big box office magnet. This last week the New York World, in its evening edition, has given a great deal of space to a discussion by its women readers as to just what shall be done to William Hohenzollern. That this subject is of vital interest is recognized by the entire world. No problem of reconstruction nor the ways and means to work out the reconstruction of the world can be settled until the determination of the future of the ex-Kaiser shall be agreed upon by the Allies' council.

Concerning "Caught in the Act."

"Caught in the Act," featuring Peggy Hyland, is announced as the current William Fox Excel Pictures release. In this play, which was directed by Harry Millarde, Miss Hyland portrays the role of a young society debutante who undergoes a number of thrilling adventures.

The picture has a comic flavor, in addition to its thrills, and is declared to be one of the best productions in which Miss Hyland has appeared.

Fred Jackson wrote the original story and Raymond L. Schrock the scenario. A large cast is seen in support of Miss Hyland.

"Vacation Land" Released December 15.

"Vacation Land" is the title of the Rothacker "Outdoor" pictures on the Exhibitors-Mutual schedule of December 15. These scenes were taken literally on the "roof of the world"—on top of the Rockies, which is known as "The Sportsman's Paradise." Hitting the mountain trail on top of bronchos, which skim perilously near precipitous ledges, the progress of the vacationists is shown through magnificent and stimulating scenery.

"Dan Cupid, M. D.," a Strand comedy starring Elinor Field, is also set for release December 15.

Strong Reports from "Infatuation."

Report from Pathe branch offices all over the country indicate that the latest Pathe feature, "Infatuation," is meeting with large success, and that Gaby Deslys has made a personal hit in the picture, and by reason of it is greatly augmenting her already large army of fan admirers. In many cities "Infatuation" has created a sensation, and exhibitors have been compelled to extend its run in order to take care of the crowds it has attracted.

Pathe News to Record Large Local Happenings

THE Pathe News, after December 24, will broaden its national scope, and, at the same time, come into closer relation to the big centers of population. For this purpose, more than ever before, it will be operated with the efficiency of an up-to-date newspaper as to rapidity of production and circulation. Should any news of large importance develop, the Pathe camera promptly will be on the scene to make pictures which will be shown in the local houses within a few hours. The organization of these special editions has been planned with an eye to smoothness of operation and quick news judgment.

Vice President Paul Brunet, in a telegram to the San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle exchange managers, thus announced the innovation: "You may advise exhibitors that, commencing with Pathe News released December 25, all issues will contain a special city edition consisting of 150 feet of topical stuff photographed and printed locally by our own special camera men. This carries out our promise to make the Pathe News bigger and better than ever."

The plan will be extended to other cities, so that, in time, Pathe will have a chain of special editions from coast to coast. "The drawing power and the selling value of such a plan are at once apparent," commented Mr. Brunet.

Blackton Begins "A House Divided."

Having successfully launched "The Common Cause," his Vitagraph special, and "Life's Greatest Problem," the labor picture, which he has placed for booking by the Independent Sales Corporation and distribution through the Film Clearing House, J. Stuart Blackton has begun "A House Divided."

This is to be an elaborated picture version of Ruth Holt Boucicault's widely discussed novel, "The Substance of His House." The adaptation is the work of Anthony Paul Kelly.

Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer are to be featured in the leading roles of "A House Divided." Lieutenant Lawrence Grossmith has another important part, while Charles and Violet Blackton are again under their father's direction.

No Gun-play for Parsons.

Guns play no part in Capitol Comedies. It is the boast of "Smiling Bill" Parsons, star and creator of these productions, that more than twenty of them have been made without once depicting him as a gun toter or a wielder of any other kind of weapon.

"Smiling Bill's" desire to make Capitol Comedies different from the usual run of joy-provoking two-reelers dates back to the day the comedian read the scenario for his first Capitol comedy, "Bill's Baby." Originally, it provided that Parsons carry a revolver to offset a stilletto in the hands of an enraged Italian, whose child the comedian had stolen to enter her in a baby show.

Exhibitors See Jewel Production.

Four of the leading exhibitors of the country visited the New York Jewel Exchange last week to view "The Heart of Humanity," Allen Holubar's screen classic featuring Dorothy Phillips. They were Frank Neuman, owner of the Regent and Royal theatres at Kansas City; M. L. Finkelstein and I. H. Ruben, of Minneapolis and St. Paul, owners of fifteen theatres, and Mark Gates, owner of the Dayton theatre at Dayton, Ohio, one of the finest theatres in the Buckeye state. Mr. Neuman stated that work on his $500,000 theatre at Kansas City, and which it is believed will be called "The Neuman," has been begun. The new Jewel picture will be shown to an invited audience at the Broadway December 20.

"The Midnight Patrol" Has Policeman for Hero

THE corner cop has stood for a good deal in his more or less turbulent career, but the millennium drawn for this guardian of the peace is here at last in the form of Select Pictures' special attraction, "The Midnight Patrol." With the distribution of this Thomas H. Ince production the policeman comes into his own, and also the exhibitor has a rich opportunity for advertising.

Thomas H. Ince is said to have produced "The Midnight Patrol" for the policeman. He declared recently that the story was written and produced for the purpose of crediting the policeman with a few of his many unheralded achievements. The plot of the story is woven around the life of a young patrolman portrayed by Thurston Hall, depicting his rapid advance from the rank of roundsman to chief of the force. The scenes are laid in the Chinese section of one of the large Western cities, while the story itself deals with the life of a Chinese underworld. Throughout the entire picture the policeman is the hero.

Without any know exception there has never been a picture in which the policeman has been shown to such good advantage, and in the face of this it is easy to believe that the average policeman will be a ready champion and willing aid in boosting for the exhibitors who show this special feature.

There have been several suggestions offered for enlisting the co-operation of the exhibitor's local police department in advertising "The Midnight Patrol." There is every reason to believe that the police of the smaller cities and towns will willingly lend their efforts to push this picture.

Triangle's "Crown Jewels" Has Title That Is Timely

NOW that the crowned heads of Europe are crashing to their doom with unexpected rapidity, what could be more appropriate than a screen drama picturing the attempts of the more thoughtful monarchs to protect their wealth? Crowns shortly may have no significance—the jewels may be removed from their royal settings; but they retain their intrinsic value.

Selecting this as a theme, Robert Hill has written what is said to be an unusually interesting crook play, "Crown Jewels." It is offered by Triangle as the release for December 22, and Claire Anderson is the featured player.

It tells of a king, who, in anticipation of losing his throne, attempts to collect the cash value for his royal gems by shipping them to his banker in the United States.

Miss Anderson portrays the role of Diana De Lille—a French refugee in America who becomes aware of the criminal activities and baffles the plan of the crooks to obtain possession of the jewels. Joe Bennett plays the male lead. Others in the supporting cast are Lillian Langdon, George Pearce and Billy Musgrave. Roy Clemens directed this latest issue on the Triangle list.

Large Money in Small Towns.

Manager J. H. Calvert, of the Omaha Universal Exchange, has reported what he maintains is a box office record that has never been beaten. J. Siegel, manager of the photoplay theatre at Antioch, Neb., a town of less than 100 population, paid Mr. Calvert $150 for a two days' showing of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and, after paying all his expenses, he recorded a net profit of $200. Mr. Calvert also reports that the theatre at Broadwater, Neb., which town has a population of 115, also paid $150 for a two days' showing of "The Kaiser," and it netted the owner a handsome profit.

A statement from Edward Armstrong, Universal's Denver manager, to the effect that a record had been established at Manville, Wyo., a town of 123 population, where "The Kaiser" drew $177 to the box office in two shows, has brought out some remarkable box office records on this unusual film attraction from exhibitors and exchangemen.

Break Two Cameras in Getting Picture.

In the filming of Zena Keefe's first picture as a star for Arden Photoplays, Inc., "The Challenge Accepted," two cameras were smashed. The first time was when one of the actors on horseback rode into the camera. Before it was repaired the second camera fell off a fifty-foot platform, from which a panorama of Camp Dix was photographed, and literally smashed into splinters. "The Challenge Accepted" was directed by Edwin L. Hollywood from the original story by Donald Gordon Reid. It will be released December 23 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Enter Old Mill Through Dugout.

Carrying out a suggestion for lobby display made in the press sheet for "Shoulder Arms," second of the Chaplin comedies to be released through First National Exhibitors' Circuit, E. H. Hulsey, owner of the Old Mill Theatre at Dallas, Texas, had the entrance arranged to resemble the entrance and exit to a trench dugout.

The novelty of the effect, enhanced by special cutouts of Charlie as a doughboy, brought such big crowds to each performance that the run was extended one week, something without precedent in the history of motion pictures in Dallas.

Gloria Joy Comedy Leads Pathe for December 22

THE Pathe program for week beginning December 22 introduces the clever child star, Gloria Joy, in the first of three comedies, released two weeks apart, which deal with the surprising and amusing adventures of a precocious and lovable child. The first is called "The Fortunes of Corinne," and, besides furnishing an admirable setting for Gloria, is a charming study of rural life and character, not omitting the philosophic tramp, whose stories start the wee heroine in her wanderings into the big world in search of adventure.

Toto, the clown who apparently has no bones in his structure, gives an overflowing laughing value to the Rolin comedy, "Check Your Baggage." It may be well termed a "smashing one-reel knockout."

The eleventh episode of the patriotic serial, "Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, is called "Betwixt Heaven and Earth," which title gives a fair indication of the perils faced by the heroine high in the air, with no apparent avenue of escape.

Official War Review No. 26 gives a thrilling collection of views of the great struggle from the snow-covered heights of Italy to the lowlands of France, and shows some of the courageous work done by the Americans under heavy fire.

Singapore is one of the strange and populous ports of the seven seas, and, during the war, has come into more than usual prominence. Post Travel Series No. 24, which deals with both the island and the city, is widely instructive and entertaining. Beside the curious native views of place and people, one is given an impressive idea of how greatly Britain has made this a most important port for her shipping.

Sennett Releases Detective Comedy.

Hailed as one of the most humorous farce comedies of the current film season, "Hide and Seek, Detectives," featuring Ben Turpin, Charles Lynn, Marie Prevost, and other well-known funmakers, is the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy released December 15.

Turpin and Lynn are detectives who pay more attention to their enjoyment than to their business. When they both fall in love with the same girl and find that they have a rival in big, burly Tom Kennedy, who resents their interference, events happen every minute. They lasso Tom, but he escapes from them, so they invent a plan to have him arrested for killing a bum they found asleep in the park.

There is a courtroom scene which is said to be one of the most farcical events ever recorded on the screen. How Tom escapes from this predicament need not be told in advance. But, anyhow, just as Ben and Charlie, with a couple of queens, are celebrating his downfall, the door opens and they look up to see the irate giant himself glowering like a storm-cloud. He carefully locks the door, escorts the ladies to chairs and gives them magazines to read while the massacre is in progress.

Edward Cline was the director.

Jewel Reports Demand for Mildred Harris' Pictures

JEWEL executives have started a nation-wide campaign for a "Mrs. Charlie Chaplin Week" at theatres, urging exhibitors to show one or more of Mildred Harris' productions during the week. To date the productions in which this young woman has been featured are "The Price of a Good Time," "Doctor and the Woman," "For Husbands Only" and "Borrowed Clothes," all having been produced by Lois Weber. The idea of running three pictures in one week was recently tried out by several Eastern theatres with great success. A New York exhibitor played "Doctor and the Woman," "For Husbands Only" and "Borrowed Clothes" two days each, and was forced to hold over the last named picture for a third day.

Mildred Harris' becoming Mrs. Chaplin has created an unusual amount of interest in this star's work, and because of the enormous amount of publicity given the marriage of the famous comedian to Lois Weber's find, Mrs. Chaplin's popularity has been doubled in the past month.

Edgar Jones Supporting Doris Kenyon.

Edgar Jones, who plays the juvenile heavy in Doris Kenyon's latest release, "Wild Honey," returns to the screen as an actor after an absence of four years. During that time Mr. Jones has been directing, having produced more than a score of pictures with such players as Mary Miles Minter, Hamilton Revelle, Lois Meredith and Marguerite Snow.

Mr. Jones is strong in dashing Western roles, which is the kind he has in "Wild Honey.' For two seasons Mr. Jones starred in "The Great Divide."

Stirring Scenes in Review.

More stirring scenes depicting the passing of Prussianism, the coming of peace and the era of reconstruction, make up the Official War Review No. 26, for release December 23.

The heroic "Arditi" Division of the Italian army passes in review after the battle of Montello. A wonderful scene is given of the use of flame-throwers in cleaning enemies from the path of the advance. Desperate fighting is shown around St. Quentin, where the French-British-American forces beat the enemy back from the Hindenburg line.

Every operation of complete battle activities is shown in these scenes. Guns are rushed up with the French 75s pour out their curtain of fire. Shells are seen bursting over the German positions. Aircraft guns are seen in action and the effect of shrapnel on an observation balloon is shown. The Canadians are seen to advance along the ruins of what was once a road, then several German tanks are captured and German prisoners begin to pour to the rear.

Brunet Announces List of Eight Months' Releases

OUR eight months' releasing schedule of Pathe features, cards of which are sent to all exhibitors, has been productive of most satisfactory results," announces Vice President Paul Brunet, of Pathe Exchange, Inc. "The attractions embrace the Extra Selected Star Photoplays, the Pathe Program Features and the Pathe Special Features; the period covered is from December 1, 1918, to July 31, 1919. It is a permanent schedule and subject only to additions of special releases, which will in nowise affect the arrangement, which provides for monthly releases both of the Extra Selected and the Program features.

"This schedule, in what it promises, is not an unaccomplished plan, but a statement of completed work, done without the rush and incomplete finish that go with what Mr. Keenan aptly calls 'the machine method of making machine pictures.'

"These pictures have been made, assembled, edited and titled with ample time for the best possible results, and could be ready for immediate distribution should such a necessity arise. They comprise, under the Extra Selected classification, four features starring Fannie Ward, three starring Frank Keenan, one starring Bessie Love, one starring Bryan Washburn; total, nine.

"The Pathe Program Features are as follows: Five features starring Baby Marie Osborne, two starring Helen Chadwick, one starring Henri Krauss; total, eight.

"The specials thus far are 'Infatuation,' the pretentious Eclipse production, directed by Louis Mercanton and starring Gaby Deslys, and 'Common Clay,' with Fannie Ward."

New Series of "The Littlest Scout."

In response to requests for more of the Paula Blackton country life stories, Mrs. Blackton has decided to make a second series of these delightful pictures.

"The Littlest Scout," featuring Charles Stuart Blackton, is scheduled as the first of the new series. It has just been completed under the supervision of J. Stuart Blackton, who has also announced the signing of contracts providing for its booking by the Independent Sales Corporation and distribution through the Film Clearing House, these two organizations also handling his labor picture, "Life's Greatest Problem," which, under its original title "Safe for Democracy," was featured at the Rivoli recently.

"The Littlest Scout" is in five-parts, and others to follow it will also be full feature length. Charles Stuart Blackton plays the title role, with Sister Violet as his "leading woman."

Garson and Neilan Receive Large Offers for Nine-Reel "The Unpardonable Sin"

IN these days of big productions it seems nothing extraordinary to hear of as much as $100,000 being paid for a negative of some few film productions. But it remained for two independent producers to refuse just twice that sum for a negative of a nine-reel production recently completed.

According to reports emanating mostly from Los Angeles, Garson and Neilan's production of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet, has brought forth many liberal offers for the negative.

Harry Garson declares he has already turned down a $200,000 cash offer, and has not yet rendered a decision on another offer of $150,000 advance, with a sharing contract which might double that sum.

It is asserted that one particular attraction to the prospective buyer is that the war element does not predominate, and that "The Unpardonable Sin" is one of the powerful productions of the year.

Messrs. Garson and Neilson announce that territorial rights on this production are not for sale. They contemplate making a big special exploitation campaign and play the larger houses throughout the country.

Opens at Clune's, Los Angeles.

Beginning New Year's week the production starts a run at Clune's Auditorium at Los Angeles, and it is said that immediately following the showing on the West Coast the Eastern premiere will be inaugurated at a leading Broadway theatre for a long run in New York at advanced prices.

Major Rupert Hughes' story of "The Unpardonable Sin" is said to be the biggest seller he ever wrote, and the book is reported as standing fourth on the list of best sellers of the year.

While not a war story, it is based on the world's greatest struggle, and from all reports it is full of dramatic human interest.

Blanche Sweet comes back to the screen after an eighteen months' absence in what is declared to be the best work of her career. Matt Moore is her leading man, and the entire cast is said to be especially strong and in keeping with the calibre of the production.

Will Be Issued in Nine Reels.

After cutting and assembling, and also inserting the various subtitles, the producers find that it will run nine instead of eight reels originally contemplated. And Messrs. Garson and Neilan both declare that there is no padding.

The story starts in Los Angeles, after which the scenes quickly shift to Belgium. Blanche Sweet plays two parts, the wronged sister and the sister that braves everything to save the wronged one.

Walter Beery is cast as Colonel Klem, the German officer, who imposes "Kultur" upon a defenseless American girl in Belgium. Miss Sweet is "Dimmy," the young American girl, who left Los Angeles for Belgium when she learned that her sister was in trouble.

The great difficulties of obtaining the final scenes of this production have already been noted. In one of the big scenes near the climax the health authorities in charge of the restrictions during the influenza epidemic stopped work on the production.

It required many doctors and twenty-five nurses armed with inoculators and the entire force wearing gas masks finally to receive permission to take the last stirring scene of "The Unpardonable Sin."

Miss Sweet, who is now in New York for her holiday shopping, returns to the Coast as this publication goes to press to start her third picture under Mr. Garson's management. The name of this picture has not been announced. Miss Sweet has already completed "The Hushed Hour," which will be released following "The Unpardonable Sin."

Four All-Stars Metro's January Contribution

FOUR Metro All-Star Series productions headed by an equal number of favorite stars comprise this firm's contribution to screen attractions for the month of January. While each will be a comedy, cheerful in tone, packed with action and wholesome pathos, great care has been taken by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, to supply the exhibitor and public with stories widely different in theme, treatment and locale.

The stars represented in the list are Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Ethel Barrymore and May Allison, appearing in the order named. Two of the comedies are adaptations from extensively read stories in national magazines, one from one of the greatest stage plays of the last decade, and another is from an original scenario by an army officer writer of note.

The first of these is "The Spender," starring Bert Lytell. It will be released throughout the country on January 6. It is somewhat different from Mr. Lytell's recent pictures, being purely comedy, and, therefore, a departure from robust melodrama.

"Oh! Oh! Annice," Viola Dana's All-Star Series contribution, is a picturization of Alexine Heyland's novel. It is a most entertaining, swiftly moving and well rounded feature. It is scheduled for January 13. Miss Dana plays Annice, concerning whom the exclamation is made. Her strange adventures come as a result of a lack of young men in a small town.

Ethel Barrymore's newest Metro picture is a photo version of her stage success, "Lady Frederick; or, the Divorcee," from the pen of W. Somerset Maugham. It will be released January 20.

"In for Thirty Days," an original story by Lieutenant Luther A. Reed, adapted by George D. Baker and T. Jefferson Geraghty, and directed by Webster Cullison, is a fast and sparkling comedy-romance. It features May Allison, and will be distributed January 27.

Jewel Does Quick Work on Fleet's Surrender

UNIVERSAL'S news pictorial staff has again given an exceptional demonstration of speed in handling a "red hot" subject, "The Surrender of the German Fleet."

Having obtained views of the actual surrender of the German fleet by special permission of Allied naval commanders, Universal foreign representatives sent the negatives to New York on the Adriatic, scheduled to dock December 9. The ship was three days late, and representatives of the Fort Lee laboratories waited for three nights and three days to board the ship at quarantine and have the film ready for the customs inspectors the minute the gang-plank was let down. The negative was taken off the ship at 4.30 Thursday afternoon, December 12, and rushed to the Fort Lee laboratory, where it was cut and edited. This stage completed, the first print was put through and exhibited on Broadway at 10 o'clock the same evening—complete.

Friday, the 13th, found the film being exhibited all over New York, in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Brooklyn and Boston, and the following day saw the film starting its first runs in Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland, Toledo, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, Charlestown, Montreal, Toronto, Albany, Syracuse and Richmond; on Sunday, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Des Moines, Omaha, St. Louis, Memphis, Oklahoma City, Louisville, Jacksonville and Nashville.

Twelve special representatives left New York City December 13 to see that the films were distributed as quickly as possible. Several thousands of dollars were spent to bring exhibitors this timely film in record time. "The Surrender of the German Fleet" is being released as a Jewel production.

Robertson-Cole Buying Productions on Merit

THE application of commercial methods to the motion picture industry has found expression in the recent organization of the Exhibitors' Mutual Corporation and its connection with the Robertson-Cole Company.

The various units of the business have been divided, and each one concentrates on its individual duties. There has heretofore been a direct connection between the producer and the distributor. This, at times, has caused friction, and in many instances placed pictures on the market that would ordinarily have been shelved.

Acting as the connecting link, the Robertson-Cole Company buys the subjects purely on their merit, not permitting the influence of producer or distributor to play any part in the transactions. This allows the manufacturer to devote his entire time to the manufacture of good subjects and the distributor to concentrate upon his service to the exhibitor.

The large organization which is maintained by the Robertson-Cole Company devotes its efforts to the securing of the best pictures the market has to offer.

The Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, the outgrowth of the Mutual Film Company, which has distributed films for many years, and the Affiliated, a combination of exhibitors, forms what is claimed to be an ideal distributing organization. The many years of experience of the Mutual and the definite knowledge of the exhibitor of his wants and the service he requires is working out into a distributing corporation that is individual in its operations and is devoting its efforts to the development and serving of the market.

The source of supply is rapidly being increased, and arrangements have been made with the National Film Corporation of America, which will furnish eight pictures a year starring Billie Rhodes and eight a year featuring Henry B. Walthall. Jesse D. Hampton will offer eight pictures with William Desmond, and the B. B. Productions will offer Bessie Barriscale in eight releases. From the studios of the Haworth Pictures Corporation eight pictures starring Sessue Hayakawa will be furnished.

Additional pictures are being negotiated for presenting well known players in regular releases through the Exhibitors' Mutual. In addition to these, single reel subjects will be added, including comedies, travel and other novel subjects.

International Sends Two Cameramen with Wilson

NOT since Napoleon was alive, when the "Little Emperor" returned from the Island of Elba and was received into the hearts of his countrymen with all the affection they are capable of displaying, have Frenchmen accorded such a wholehearted welcome to any man as they are now giving President Wilson. There isn't an American living whose heart doesn't swell with pride at the honor being bestowed upon our President, nor is there one who isn't wishing he could witness these history-making events.

This is exactly what has been made possible by the enterprise of the International Film Service Company, Inc. Anticipating this natural desire, it has sent two expert news cameramen abroad who will follow closely in the President's footsteps in his journey through France, England and Italy, and every incident of the momentous trip will be photographed and reproduced on the screens of this country.

These pictures will appear in the early issues of the "Big Four" news reel combination. The first issue will make its appearance in the leading motion picture theatres during the coming week, and will mark the consummation of an idea that has long been in the mind of its originator.

Ever since W. R. Hearst, through his International Film Service Company, Inc., first entered the news reel field the idea of a practical "Newspaper of the Screen" has never left his head. In keeping with the "newspaper" idea, to bring the news right down to the minute, three issues a week will be made by the International under the titles of Hearst News, Universal Current Events and Screen Telegram, to be released through the exchanges of Universal.

In addition to all the news that is news from everywhere another feature to appear in these reels of great interest to old and young alike is timely cartoons and animated comics by all the artists of the Hearst newspapers, including such masters of their art as Winsor McKay, T. A. Dorgan (Tad), Hal Coffman, Tom Powers and Harry Murphy. In each issue one of these world-famous laugh producers will be represented.

Eddie Polo Received by Large Crowds in Mid-West

EDDIE POLO, Universal serial star, was received with enthusiasm by film followers in the first three cities visited on his return trip to the Pacific coast. After leaving New York, Mr. Polo went to Cleveland, where he appeared at the Jennings, Iris, Norval, Stork, Sunbeam, Ezella, Eclair, Norwood, Sun and Alhambra theatres, being greeted at each theatre by an overflow crowd despite the fact that it rained steadily during his stay in the Ohio metropolis. Following his last theatrical appearance in Cleveland Mr. Polo was the guest of honor at a banquet at the Hotel Winton, where Will Rogers, star of the Follies show, acted as toastmaster, and E. J. Smith, Cleveland manager for Universal, presented Mr. Polo with a silver loving cup.

Leaving Cleveland, Mr. Polo proceeded to Detroit, where he appeared at the Cozy, Nettie-B, Olympic, Globe, Stratford, Rosebud, Jewel, Rosedale, Circle, Quo Vadis, Russell, Dreamland and Home. After leaving Detroit Mr. Polo appeared at the Rialto, Superba, Quo Vadis, White Eagle and Overland theatres at Toledo and was greeted by capacity houses at each theatre.

Mr. Polo left Toledo for Chicago, where he will spend several days before proceeding to Indianapolis and Kansas City. He will return to Los Angeles about January 6 and will begin work on a new serial at once.

Spoor-Thompson Signs a Large Processing Contract

J. A. BERST, president of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has just signed a long term contract with the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories to process all of his corporation's films by this new method. The contract calls for the processing of many thousands of feet of film each week.

Mr. Berst, who was for many years vice-president and general manager of Pathe, is one of the film executives who has a thorough understanding and knowledge of the laboratory end of the business. He made a thorough and exhaustive study of the Spoor-Thompson process, and examined with great care the result of the work under this new system.

Through this new method of processing film it is claimed the entire length of the film is uniformly developed with a high standard of quality and without the variance in quality resulting from the developing in short lengths.

By processing the film in one thousand foot lengths only two splices are necessary to the reel, thus greatly prolonging the life of the film. The developing process is controlled automatically for temperature and humidity, so regardless of weather manufacture continues under the same conditions the year 'round, which fact makes each print a duplicate of the original.

Just Why Blache Went West.

When Director Herbert Blache reached the Metro studios in Hollywood upon his arrival in California from New York the other day the first person to greet him was Albert Capellani, director for Nazimova. Capellani noticed that Blache's right arm was in a sling, and that both of his hands were bandaged. He diffused an odor of antiseptics and ointments.

"My poor Blache," exclaimed Capellani, "were you in a wreck"?

"No—just movies," replied Blache. Whereupon he explained that while he was directing "The Man Who Stayed at Home," the big Screen Classics, Inc., all-star production in New York, a smoke-bomb exploded in his right hand, burning it severely. A few days before that occurred a dog bit him on the left hand.

"I concluded," said Blache, "that if such dire things happened to a man who stayed at home, I'd better leave for other parts—and here I am."

Blache will direct Viola Dana in "Diana Ardway."

Bacon-Backer Film on Ten-Twenty-Thirty Program

FOLLOWING the announcement made last week that the J. Stuart Blackton production, "Life's Greatest Problem," written by Anthony Paul Kelly and featuring Mitchell Lewis, is the second attraction in the Ten-Twenty-Thirty series, comes word that the next two pictures to be booked under this fixed price plan, will be the Bacon-Backer feature, "A Woman's Experience," with Mary Boland as the star, which enjoyed a pre-release run at the Rialto Theatre, New York; and Paula Blackton's five-part story of country life, "The Little Scout," which are to be released in the order named.

"The placing of these two productions with the Independent Sales Corporation," says an official of the company, "gives evidence of the fact that J. Stuart Blackton and the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation were quick to recognize the opportunity offered independent producers to find an immediate market for their productions without burdening themselves with the expense and worries of exploitation and distribution.

"At the same time, the securing of these pictures for the Ten-Twenty-Thirty series further convinces exhibitors that to hold a Ten-Twenty-Thirty franchise is a guarantee that really great productions will come to their theatres at a fixed minimum price, which will insure handsome profits."

The first release under this policy was Evelyn Nesbit and son, Russell Thaw, in "Her Mistake," directed by Julius Steger, and it will be followed by J. Stuart Blackton's "Life's Greatest Problem."

It is further announced that all of the Independent Sales Corporation's releases, whether they are specials, or the Ten-Twenty-Thirty series, will be distributed through the recently opened branches of the Film Clearing House, located in important film centres throughout the country.

Ralph Ince Gets Praise from E. K. Lincoln

E. K. LINCOLN, especially engaged as star of the newly formed organization, "S-L Pictures," is greatly delighted with the production methods pursued in the making of his initial starring vehicle, now under way at the Sawyer-Lubin studios in New York. Associated with the leading figure of "Lafayette, We Come" are Ralph Ince, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin. Commenting recently on the facility with which the picture in which he is starred is being produced, together with the general excellence of the general studio management, Mr. Lincoln remarked:

"From the time the scenario was finally O.K.'d until the selection of the least important member of the cast which is working for my support, Ince & Sawyer have displayed a technical knowledge and aptness for details which to my mind will insure the picture's ultimate success. In such matters as proper studio lighting, selection of furniture, construction of sets, securing of properties, choosing of exact types to fit the various roles and the innumerable other details which go to make up a successful production, the most painstaking care and effort have been exerted.

"My confidence in Ralph Ince as a director capable of turning out productions worthy of bearing the name 'special' has been more than justified after witnessing his work on the first S-L picture. His ability to secure dramatic effects, together with the talent for injecting real "punch scenes' in any production which he directs, makes me feel certain that this particular feature will stand out among the attractions of the year. Mr. Sawyer has chosen a perfect cast in my support, the leading figures of whom are Grace Darling and Clara Joel. He has insured the production in every way possible."

Past Year Unique in Film Annals, Declares Carlton

CARLE E. CARLTON says, "The year just past has been the most unique in the annals of motion picture history because of the uncertain conditions brought about by the war, the influenza epidemic and other unprecedented and unforeseen occurrences since the inception of the motion pictures. Readjustment consequently is now in order. The coming year ought to be, and if the exhibitors will bend themselves into a unit as in other commercial and artistic enterprises, can be the most important year in the history of the film business.

"New York, since the war, has become the center of motion picture activity, which London has been heretofore, for the marketing of the entire world, and it is up to the producers and exhibitors to keep a firm hand on this situation."

Mr. Carlton does not believe the coming year will in any manner have a derogatory influence on those pictures with a war background if they are such films as have a romantic or heart-gripping interest, as well as a depiction of the life of our boys in the trenches. The big primitive emotions, such as love, hate, patriotism, jealousy, ambition, bravery, etc., belong to no particular time or period in history, but to all times and to all peoples.

"He's In Again" Is First of New Bulls Eye Comedies

THE first of the new series of two-reel comedies featuring Billy West was released to exhibitors on December 15, and is titled "He's In Again." The next one, released January 15, will be called "A Rolling Stone." One will be released each month for about three months, after which there will be two each month.

M. L. Cohen, president of the Bulls Eye Film Corporation, producing this new series, announces that the company is now hard at work at the studio in Hollywood under the direction of Charles Parrott, who has a number of new ideas and novel stunts he intends to use in the forthcoming comedies. Prominent in the cast supporting Billy West is Leo White, who has appeared with him in almost all of his pictures, while a new "heavy" has been engaged, F. P. Heck.

Among the state rights buyers who have secured rights to this series are the Southwestern Film Corporation, of Dallas, for Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas, and Standard Film Service, Cleveland, for Ohio and Michigan.

Current Number of Graphic Best Issue, Says Gaumont

WHAT is characterized by the laboratory men of the Gaumont Company as the best issue of their news reels is Graphic No. 38, forwarded to independent exchanges on Friday, December 13. It opens with thrilling scenes showing our boys marching into Germany; while another war picture shows many thousand soldiers at Camp Funston, saddened because the Huns gave up before they had a chance to cross the ocean. In addition 50,000 Italian-Americans are shown marching in a great victory parade in Chicago celebrating the part Italy took in the defeat of the Huns.

Among the other views is one showing the "Empress of Britain" bringing a load of doughboys home, with many close-up which will enable friends and relatives to recognize the boys. Another scene shows a Japanese prince visiting Washington, and a close-up of a German supergun captured by the fourth American army is also shown.

Gaumont News 38 also contains many interesting and timely views. The fourth installment of "Flying for Uncle Sam" appears in this number and pictures how an airplane observer acts as the eyes of the artillery and directs cannon fire from the clouds. Other subjects show Mystic Shriners in Houston, Texas, Capt. B. B. Lipsner, former chief of the Air Mail service, who resigned, his post, and Vice President Marshall.

Quick Sales Campaign on Tom Mix Reissues

ONLY a short time ago Exclusive Features, Inc., announced that they would offer state rights buyers a series of sixteen two-reel Tom Mix comedy-dramas, and already a great deal of territory has been sold.

Mr. Goldstein, of Exclusive Features, reports that contracts for the following territory have been signed: North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida, to Savini Films, Inc., of Atlanta, Ga.; eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, to Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Philadelphia, Pa.; western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, to Quality Film Corporation, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Michigan, to Strand Features, of Detroit, Mich.; Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, to Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Philadelphia, Pa.; northern New Jersey, to Frank Gersten, Inc., of 130 East 46th street, New York City; Iowa and Nebraska, to Sterling Film Corporation, of Omaha, Neb.; Texas and Arkansas, to Southwestern Film Corporation, of Dallas, Texas, and eastern and western Missouri, Kansas and southern Illinois, to Phil Goldstone.

There is still a good deal of choice territory left open, but it is expected that it will be disposed of within a short time, as many state rights buyers have had inquiries from exhibitors, who are showing much interest in the Tom Mix two-reelers and are anxious to book them.

Whether the New York territory will be sold or booked direct by Exclusive Features, Inc., has not as yet been decided. An announcement regarding this will probably be made within a short time.

Stoermer Is Optimistic Regarding State Rights

THE state rights field promises to come back to its own swiftly. Since the climax of the war, activitles have multiplied, independent producers and independent buyers keeping step with each other in the stimulation of this branch of film profit. William Stoermer, author of "The Honor System," and just now releasing a new production, is all optimism.

"Optimist that I am, and I confess myself amazed at the extent geographically and financially that the state rights field holds in the cinema market," says Mr. Stoermer, "my surprise follows the campaign I am prosecuting to let the public know what my new picture, 'The Tidal Wave,' is about. The state rights field isn't new to me; but there's a new element in the market, and ringing down the curtain on the big tragedy abroad has given matters a new drive.

"There's scarcely a state rights block on the map that isn't indicated several times in the answers my trade advertising has generated. And the prices that are suggested in some of the inquiries prove again that the film field is productive for producers who can 'deliver the goods.'

"The Tidal Wave," I confidentially believe, will justify the interest my announcements have aroused.

"No observer so far who has seen it but expresses my own optimism regarding it. It is romance and is isn't; a mystery subject and yet not quite that; a detective story and yet more than that; a spectacle, yet greater than this aspect of the story is its human drama. One thing, I believe exhibitors and audiences will agree, the picture has speed. It has been cut as adroitly as I believe it has been produced.

"The story was inspired by Robert Louis Stevenson's observation that big dramatic upheavals in the destinies of humanity are as likely to be found in nations as in individuals. This theme gave me scope for swift, varied and absorbing plot, counterplot and spectacular situations.

Brockliss Gets Foreign Rights to S.-L. Pictures

AN ANNOUNCEMENT of importance relative to distribution in foreign markets was made this week by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, the organizers of the newly formed producing organization, "S-L Pictures," which will present E. K. Lincoln as star. Arrangements have been consummated between this organization and Sydney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., whereby Brockliss, Inc., will have entire charge of the distribution in all countries exclusive of the United States and Canada for the series of Lincoln features, the first of which is now in course of production under the direction of Ralph Ince.

The contract was made only after the producers of "S-L Pictures" had completed a study of the various companies handling screen productions for export. Due to his extensive knowledge of the peculiar conditions which make up the market for foreign distribution Mr. Garrett was finally selected.

The consummation of the contract is marked by the establishment of a precedent by Sawyer & Lubin. An individual series of "ads" will be designed to precede the introduction of "S-L Pictures" in countries outside of the United States and Canada. Special publicity stories for translation in various languages, and written from the viewpoint of the different nationalities, will be furnished the promotion department by J. Frank Brockliss, Inc.

Hall Organization Gets "A Romance of the Air"

BECAUSE Frank Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation, has a brother in the service, it appears that some have jumped at the conclusion that Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American ace, featured with Edith Day in the Crest Picture production, "A Romance of the Air," must be at least a cousin.

Mr. Hall, however, denies that this relationship exists, saying: "I would indeed be mighty proud to claim relationship with Lieutenant Hall, one of the two survivors of the original Lafayette Escadrille, as would any American, but I do not think I can even say he is a distant cousin. However, I feel particularly honored that the Independent Sales Corporation was selected to market 'A Romance of the Air.'

"I might add, too, that the first cousin of the Independent Sales Corporation, the Film Clearing House, an organization formed to handle the physical distribution of films, and which has been in operation since December 1, will have the exclusive handling of 'A Romance of the Air,' through its eighteen distributing units.

"There will be no releases made, however, in any one territory, of this adventurous love story of cloud-land, until after Lieutenant Hall has made a personal appearance of several weeks at one of the large theatres in that particular territory. This plan of releasing a picture while the star is arousing public interest by appearing in person and talking informally to his audiences is new, and exhibitors will recognize the value such publicity will mean to their box office.

"The only relationship between Lieutenant Hall and myself that I can determine is purely a business one, and exhibitors will soon have the opportunity of making Lieutenant Hall and his 'A Romance of the Air' at least a big brother to their box office."

Raver Breaks Precedent With "Maciste" Serial

WHOEVER heard of asking a critic to contemplate twenty-four thousand feet of pictures in one production, much less sit through it and then try to remember what he saw?" said one reviewer when requested by Harry Raver to attend a showing of "The Liberator," starring the Italian soldier-star Maciste. Yet the plan was carried out, except that two sessions of two and a half hours each were held, instead of one stretch of five hours.

According to Mr. Raver, the experiment was a success beyond his expectations, and proves his contention that the exhibitor should know all about a series of pictures before he books them and should not be kept in ignorance about the quality of any number of episodes of a production.

"That there was some slight diversity of opinion among the critics," says Mr. Raver, "may be accounted for by the fact that they had never before sat through a complete series and that the episodes were not broken up by synopsis titles. At any rate, each reviewer has his opinion and none of them entirely agreed, which leads me to believe I have an unusual picture."

One reviewer said the production lacked weirdness and thrills of the American serial, while another said it was the most weird and unusual film he had ever seen. One reviewer said the production suffered from the well-known foreign technique, while another said the production was of unusual thoroughness and strict conformity to the actual scenes. One advises the picture be released in three parts of eight reels each, another says it is fine entertainment as it is because it is progressive and does not repeat itself, still another wants it done in five-reel episodes.

"That I value these opinions is evidenced by the flood of inquiries I have received since their publication, and the opportunity afforded to select a market to the best advantage. The fact remains that Maciste has proven himself a star of the first consideration and enjoys a large following, and that competent authorities on motion pictures have given 'The Liberator' a clean bill of health gives me confidence in the success of the production."

Mr. Raver announces that he is considering several offers for the purchase of entire North American rights before giving definite decisions in the matter of selling individual territories.

Co-operative Exploitation Campaign for "Mickey"

AN EXCELLENT example of the full use of co-operative publicity between the motion picture industry and kindred business enterprises is the campaign worked out by H. J. Shepard, of the W. H. Productions Company, and employed in the exploitation of "Mickey," starring Mabel Normand. An added point of particular interest to exhibitors is the fact that notwithstanding the completeness of the plan devised, it is claimed by the producers that it can be carried out at practically no expense to theatre managers although securing for them window displays and other valuable advertising privileges.

The extent to which music is employed in the exploitation is the feature of this campaign, which includes a "Mickey" song with words by Harry Williams and music by Neil Moret, published by Daniels and Wilson; three different graphophone records prepared by the Columbia Graphophone Company, one of the song, one a fox-trot arrangement played by the Earl Fuller Jazz Band, and the other a double-faced record with song on one side by the Sterling Trio, while the other side is a medley taken from the orchestration prepared for this picture. In addition, the Okeh Record Company and the Vocalion Company both have prepared records of the song, and the Aeolian Company and Universal Music Roll Company have piano rolls of the song.

The method employed successfully by a number of prominent exhibitors to create advance interest in the production consists in working in conjunction with the Woolworth or Kresge five and ten cent stores and Columbia graphaphone dealers. A week or two before "Mickey" is to be shown, window displays of the song or records are prepared with announcement that the picture will be shown in a certain theatre. In addition, copies of the song are sold in the theatre lobby, or in some instances given away during matinees to attract patronage; and during this time as well as during the showing of the picture, phonographs obtained from the dealers play "Mickey" records in the lobbies. As an advance business-getter, the song is also sung by a soloist, while a slide with the chorus is thrown on the screen so the audience can join in, and some houses with drop curtains use them for displaying a 24-sheet, as shown in the accompanying illustration. Announcements are also thrown on the screen to the effect that the records and piano rolls can be secured from certain dealers.

At a recent meeting of representatives of the phonograph company held in Boston, which was also attended by officials of the five and ten cent stores, they expressed their enthusiasm over the campaign as outlined and promised their hearty co-operation.

The W. H. Productions Company announce that "Mickey" is meeting with great success all over the country, and in many instances is breaking box-office records as well as shattering precedents by the length of the run. Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York, a vaudeville house, is running this picture this week as an experiment, as they are said to have never used a feature picture before, and report big business notwithstanding this is usually a bad week, the one before the holidays.

Among the theatres which have booked "Mickey" for seven days or longer, and are thereby said to have broken their precedents of not playing a feature over three days, are The Trent, in Trenton; Empire, in New Brunswick; Lyceum and Plaza, in Bayonne; Montauk, in Passaic, N. J.; Mishler Theatre, in Altoona.

The following recent sales of territory have been made on this production: To Sol L. Lesser, for California and Arizona; M. Rosenburg, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; Supreme Photoplay Productions, for Pennsylvania, and Boston Photoplay Company, for New England.

In connection with the showing at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York, the Columbia company carried a "Mickey" window display in their Fifth avenue store, which is said to be the first time a photoplay has been so advertised on Fifth avenue.

Dave Solomon Handling Keane Film in New York

"THE SPREADING EVIL," James Keane's special production, released with the endorsements of Secretary Josephus Daniels and other notables, is said to be creating a mild sensation in booking circles in New York City.

Dave Solomon, long associated with Radium Gold Fibre Screen, Inc., and more recently with Count G. Scippico in the production of "Lest We Forget," has secured the booking rights for this territory.

With an organization made up of only three or four people, Solomon has recorded approved bookings on his picture amounting to more than the outright sale price asked for New York City. Sam Rubinstein, formerly with the Universal and Four-Square exchanges, is visiting the exhibitors in the territory south of Fourteenth street, Manhattan, and throughout Long Island, while Thomas Kelly, formerly with the General Film, Paramount and Pathe, has the territory north of Fourteenth street, reaching to Mount Vernon.

It has been the experience of those who have the Greater New York territory in charge, so they say, that the best advertisement "The Spreading Evil" has enjoyed has been the success of the early engagements throughout the district. The picture appears to have a strong box office appeal, and in some cases has been placed in as many as three theatres within two blocks of one another, with less than two weeks separating the engagements.

Gaumont Special Sold for New York.

The Gaumont Company announces that its one-reel special, "Driven from the Seas," showing the surrender of the German Fleet to the Allied Navies on November 21, 1918, will be distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, 509 Fifth avenue, New York City, in the territory covering Greater New York, Long Island, Westchester, Putnam and Rockland counties, New York, and Northern New Jersey.

Large Part of Country Sold on "Silent Mystery"

ACCORDING to an announcement from the Silent Mystery Corporation, the latest Francis Ford serial, "The Silent Mystery," is proving itself to be one of the best serials of the year, which is attested by the fact that a number of prominent state right buyers have already contracted for territory.

All of the eastern territory has been sold. Canada, east and west, and the South, and foreign rights are being rapidly disposed of, and Louis Burston, producer, as well as Hiller & Wilk, the selling agents, state they expect to have the entire world sold by the first of the year.

Their initial announcement of closed territory is as follows: Greater New York and Northern New Jersey to Merit Film Corporation, 126 W. 46th street, New York; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Arrow Film Company, 1235 Vine street, Philadelphia; Eastern and Western Canada to Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, 221 Yonge street, Toronto; Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia and North Carolina to Super-Film Attractions, 1209 E street N. W., Washington; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to Penn Film Service, 938 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh; Georgia, Florida, Alabama and South Carolina to First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Atlanta; Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi to R. Dean Craver, Charlotte; Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin to Bee Hive Exchange, Chicago; and the New England States to the Silent Mystery Corporation, 42 Piedmont street, Boston.

The story of "The Silent Mystery" is said to be replete with novelties and the product of Mr. Ford's ingenuity intertwined with punch and mystery, which will hold an audience throughout the entire fifteen episodes. In addition to Mr. Ford, who enacts the role of Phil Kelly, the cast includes Mae Gaston as Betty, and Rosemary Theby as the Egyptian Priestess Kah.

Rapf Champions War Films Having Good Love Stories

HARRY RAPF, who for a number of years prior to entering the motion picture production field was in the theatrical business, decries those who say that war pictures are through, and calls attention to the fact that the Civil War was used as the background for a large number of plays, vaudeville sketches and pictures which have been successful.

Says Mr. Rapf, "It is only natural that pictures with the great world war as a background should hold attention. The moving picture is no different from the stage, the newspaper or magazine. Every newspaper has headlines referring to soldiers and war material; war is the basic idea of cartoons and editorials, and why should the moving picture be different?

"During the recent showing of the Government picture, 'Under Four Flags,' at the Rivoli the spontaneous applause was tremendous. Some of the biggest successes on the stage are war plays, and they are playing to capacity audiences.

"I claim for my latest picture, 'Wanted for Murder,' which was written by a newspaper man, S. Jay Kaufman, that it is a story which contains a human love romance, and that it is different—it is not just a picture, but a big idea made into a picture."

The Independent Sales Corporation, distributing this production through the Film Clearing House, reports that a very large number of inquiries, both by wire and letter, were received from all parts of the country requesting information regarding the manner of release and distribution for this attraction. However, that since the Independent Sales Corporation is to handle this picture, it is unnecessary to send inquiries to the New York office, and dates for showings can be arranged through any of the depots of the Film Clearing House, which are already in operation in Atlanta, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, San Francisco and Seattle.

Attention is also called to the immense amount of publicity that is being given in the newspapers at present in the shape of news articles, editorials and cartoons in connection with the demand that the former Kaiser be brought to trial, which indicates the timeliness of this production, and which can be used in effective ways by enterprising exhibitors.

"Wanted for Murder" is also said to be high in entertainment value, which alone would make it an attraction from a box office standpoint, and in addition the popular star, Elaine Hammerstein, is featured in the story, which is one of adventurous romance.

"Little Orphant Annie" Appeals to Young and Old

WHILE many exhibitors appear to be under the impression that "Little Orphant Annie" is a "kid's" picture, the Pioneer Film Corporation, distributing this special production, advise that this is not the case and that it is just as compelling to older people as it is to youngsters. Says this official: "Just as James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem is a favorite with both young and old, so will the screen version make its appeal, presenting all of the homely pathos and delightful painting of characters that the Hoosier poet was noted for.

"Grown folks will appreciate the more dramatic scenes, the heart interest and pathetic story of the little orphan girl. There have been few dramas screened where the tug at the heart strings is more apparent, and coupled with the excellent acting and superior plot, makes a most decided appeal to grown men and women. The fact that men and women employed as critics for the trade press admit that this production touched them deeply would not indicate that it is only a kid's picture, but that it will appeal to audiences of all kinds.

"There is, however, much in the picture that appeals to children; this is, of course, to the exhibitors' advantage, as he can, in his appeal for patronage, lay stress on the fact that 'Little Orphant Annie' is the kind of a picture that will appeal to both young and old; and, in fact, mothers and fathers, who are famliar with Riley's poems, will probably be just as anxious to see the picture as the children. This picture, too, does not deal with murder, war, or the eternal triangle, and has no sensational plot. The characterization that it is a picture for "young folks and young old folks aptly describes it'."

Perret to Screen Plays by Gabriel D'Annunzio

SEVERAL of the famous plays of Gabriel D'Annunzio, the celebrated Italian poet, will be screened, with Dolores Cassinelli as the star, according to an annoucement issued during the past week by Leonce Perret Productions. These subjects, which have been presented in this country by the well known actress, Eleanore Duse, include such tragedies as "La Citta Morta" ("The Dead City"), "La Figlia di Jorie" ("The Daughter of Jorie"), "La Gioconda," together with the beautiful dreamlike "Le Virtine delle Rocci" and the sombre tragedy of passion, "In Trionfo della More."

Arrangements for the filming of D'Annunzio's works have been handled by his son, Ugo D'Annunzio, who is in this country on a special mission for the Italian Government and has been directing the big Caproni aeroplane factory in Detroit, and who has had a number of interviews both with the officials of the Leonce Perret Productions and Miss Cassinelli.

Dolores Cassinelli is at the present time working at the Metro Studio on the third production in which she has appeared for Perret Productions, and which is being directed by Madame Blache under Leonce Perret's supervision. Among the distinguished visitors to the studio during the filming of this production was Francis de Croisset, a well known French author, who has to his credit such plays as "The Marriage of Kitty" and "The Hawk." Lieutenant Croisset is an officer in the French Army, and he expressed his admiration for the efficient methods employed in a modern American studio in the filming of special productions.

Quick Showing by Gaumont of Hun Naval Surrender

THE Gaumont News Service did some rapid work in showing on the screen in America the surrender of the German high seas fleet and U-boats. The negative was shipped to this country by the London branch of the Gaumont Company and arrived in New York on the morning of December 12, and notwithstanding the necessary delay for customs inspection, a copy was prepared and fully titled, and shown on the screen at the Rialto theatre within a few hours. On the same night hundreds of copies were shipped to independent exchanges throughout the country.

November 21 was not "Der Tag" for which the Prussians had so long waited, but it was "the day" of their great humiliation. The weather was foggy and hazy when the Kaiser's thirteen large battleships and battle cruisers, six light cruisers and fifty destroyers, steamed slowly through the lane formed by French, British and American warships and ingloriously struck their colors. They were then imprisoned in the Firth of Forth, where they were reviewed by King George, Admiral Sims, the Prince of Wales, Admiral Beatty, and other allied commanders.

Though the pictures were taken in the early morning and the weather conditions were not of the best, Gaumont camera men are said to have succeeded in getting some wonderful views, which are doubly interesting, as they are the first pictures of the German navy shown in this country since the beginning of the war, and the first showing of the warships and giant U-boats built since 1914.

"SYLVIA ON A SPREE"

Metro Pictures Corporation Features Emmy Wehlen in Five-Reel Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, "Sylvia on a Spree," is an exceptionably enjoyable, polite comedy, featuring Emmy Wehlen at the head of a large and pleasing cast. This was adapted by June Mathis from the original story by E. Forst, and directed by Harry L. Franklin, under general supervision of Maxwell Karger. The production has been very carefully made in every detail, and the artistic print work itself is worthy of special commendation.

The plot of this comedy is based upon two special weaknesses that probably afflict every sheltered girl, however well bred, at some time or another in her early years. One of them is to consult a fortune teller and the other is to have a close view of bohemian life. In this instance the heroine, Sylvia Fairponts, capably portrayed by Miss Wehlen, has been reading newspaper scandles emanating from "the wicked Beaulieu Inn." What she has read makes her desirous of having a look at the place more than anything else in life. She consults a clairvoyant, Mme. Claire St. Claire, who readily assures Sylvia, for a liberal fee, that she has plenty of excitement coming her way; also a handsome young lover. True enough, the latter comes along very speedily, and Sylvia soon demands that he take her to Beaulieu Inn. The lover is naturally horrified at the thought of taking her there, but she insists, and he finally arranges, with the help of her brother, to take her to Beaulieu Inn and forever cure her of a desire to see it. The way in which this is accomplished makes a story of unusual interest and amusement.

There are some good characters in this, including Francesca Ward as the clairvoyant and Frank Currier as an actor of the old school. But the strong points in the offering are its enjoyable plot as a whole and the fine humor it develops.

Others in the cast are W. I. Percival, Eugene Acker, Peggy Parr, Isabel O'Madigan, Rose Wood, Bliss Milford, Alice Turner, Stepnie Anderson, Bert Tuey, Joseph Sweeney and Eddie Meyers.

"A PERFECT 36"

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation Features Mabel Normand in Five-Reel Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MABEL NORMAND is one of the younger screen artists who have succeeded in developing a following among picturegoers, and whose future work should be worth watching. She has come up splendidly since her early days in the one and two-reel comics, and in addition to her manifest physical charms and general daring she has many of the attributes of a first class comedienne. Her humor springs from a vivid and buoyant personality, and she never forces it to the point of exasperating her audiences, as female humorists are so often tempted to do. But we do not feel that she has yet brought her humor to its fullest development, unless it was in her highly successful offering, "Mickey," which the writer has not seen, but which the public at large has taken to very kindly.

This current release, "A Perfect 36," is a very enjoyable subject and has some fine humorous moments. But for all that, and regardless of the fact that it is well above the average offering of its kind, it could undoubtedly have been stronger. The humor is effective and delicately handled, and the sub-titles are bright and laughable. The thing that is missing, it seems to the reviewer, is the touch of sympathy or pathos that is an almost inevitable concomitant of the best humor. Chaplin has this at times, almost to the point of tears, and we mention this because we think Mabel Normand could develop it if given a chance. There were opportunities for sympathetic touches in her friendship for Bessie, who was falsely suspected of stealing the jewels, but they were not utilized. We thing that just as serious dramas demands occasional comedy relief to keep it human and appealing, so humor in more lengthy offerings demands occasional moments of sincerity and pathos to get a balanced effect. We would like to see Mabel's director, Charles Giblyn, give her a try-out in something of a more mixed emotional appeal, but always of course with particular stress upon the humor.

"THE RULING PASSIONS"

Select Presents Schomer Production in Which the Late Edwin Arden Appears to Splendid Advantage.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN OUR ISSUE of October 12 a full review of "The Ruling Passions" appeared, and for that reason we will not at this time attempt to cover it in detail. The picture, which was written and produced by Abraham S. Schomer, with the late Edwin Arden and Julia Dean in the principal roles, has been cut down considerably since its first showing, and with good results.

The Select Pictures Corporation is presenting the production as a special feature which carries with it a message of mental control. In its condensed state, which, by the way, leaves it still with between five and six thousand feet to the good, this message is driven home with considerable force. We predict for it a successful run.

"THE SURRENDER OF THE GERMAN FLEET"

Jewel Special Production Presents Thrilling 1,100-Foot Review of German Capitulation.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS special news film, which arrived in New York Thursday afternoon of last week, is a splendid photographic record of the most ignominious naval surrender in the history of the world. One by one, sailing majestically between a line of British and American battleships thirty miles in length, the great German fighting vessels are seen at close range as they gave themselves up. The vessels, led by the Seydlitz, are identified by name, and the student of current history will be amply repaid for his view of this great film.

It is like painting the lily to attempt expressing what a screen version of these tremendous events mean. It is something that should and no doubt will be seen by every live citizen of the world. As a matter of permanent historical record it is only another of those films that are destined to become of inestimable value to the world as time passes, and copies of it should accordingly be preserved by public institutions.

Not only are the great battleships shown in the act of surrendering, but many submarines are also pictured being turned over to British sailors. An interesting picture is shown of King George on the U. S. S. New York, in company with Admirals Sims and Rodman and the Prince of Wales.

"CAUGHT IN THE ACT"

Fox Film Corporation Presents Peggy Hyland in Strong Farce-Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Fox feature, "Caught in the Act," is a good example of screen farce-comedy. It should appeal to observers everywhere who have a leading toward a bright and whimsical plot, with complicated humorous situations as the dominant feature. It was adapted by Raymond Schrock from a story by Fred Jackson and has been capably directed by Harry Millarde.

This moves off like a comedy, but later reaches and maintains farce tempo. Much of the credit for the finished performance goes to Peggy Hyland as the heroine, Priscilla Kane, and Leslie Austen as the hero, Langdon Trevor, but we think perhaps an equal amount also belongs to Wally McKeown, who plays Trevor's valet. The sub-titles are cleverly modern and tend to keep up the brisk speed of the performance.

Priscilla Kane is a well-bred girl who surrenders to a natural longing for a little romantic adventure. One day while she is in a mending shop having her hat repaired a young man enters and asks to have a rip in his trousers mended. The proprietress of the place is in the rear of the shop and Priscilla obligingly helps him mend the torn place. He, thinking she is employed in the shop, and being at once attracted to her, gives Priscilla his card and asks her to go to his apartments and mend a lot of clothes for him. The girl acts on this impulse and her visits to the place on this errand result in even more adventure than she had expected. The situations, while broad, have been handled with delicacy and much excellent humor, and there is an abundance of plot interest in this story.

Others in the cast are George Bunny, Mrs. Carlotta Coer, Elizabeth Garrison, Ellen Cassidy, Mr. Martin and Henry Hallam.

"THE ETERNAL CITY"

Five-Part Reissue of the Hall Caine Story Featuring Pauline Frederick on Paramount Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE latest reissue on the Paramount Success Series is a five-part version of the Hall Caine story of Rome and London, "The Eternal City," featuring Pauline Frederick. In several ways this picture of three years ago stands revival with considerable credit to itself. First of all is the fact that the outdoor scenes in Rome and London were taken in these famous cities themselves. In Rome, the views of the outside of the Vatican and of St. Peter's and the scenes at the Coliseum should give the picture unique interest. It is also thoroughly well acted by the star and a supporting cast whose leading members consist of Thomas Holding, Frank Losee, Fuller Melish, George Majeroni, Lottie Alter and George Stillwell.

The story is one of those high pressure romances that Hall Caine delights in writing. The plot is complicated, but it has been condensed into five parts without losing the thread of events. A fictitious Pope is one of the characters. The love story concerns David Rossa and Donna Roma, one an abandoned infant who becomes a power in Italian politics; the other a beautiful girl, a foster sister of David's, who is known as the mistress of Baron Bonelli, but is reunited to the man she had known and loved as a child.

"CROWN JEWELS"

Triangle Picture Featuring Claire Anderson Is a Criminal Story with Fair Plot.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

INTERNATIONAL criminals and a few honest folk figure in "Crown Jewels," a five-part Triangle picture written by Robert Hill and directed by Roy Clements. Claire Anderson heads the cast. The interest is fairly well sustained, and the author has contrived to keep away from the usual course of events employed in this grade of fiction. The production has merit, the acting of the star and Lillian Langdon being particularly effective.

The ruler of a European kingdom which is not on the map, realizing that crowns are a dangerous sort of headgear at the present time, determines to send his jewels to America and have them put in the safe deposit vaults of one of our solidly built banks. Baron Strickland is the official chosen by the monarch to put the matter through. Madame Levine, head of a band of international crooks, finds out the jewels are to cross the seas. She immediately starts for this country, and puts into motion a plan to secure the treasure.

Passing herself off as a woman of title, madame calls upon the banker, Maxwell Grey, who is to receive the jewels, and makes the first move in her game. A young French refugee, Diana DeLille, is introduced to Madame Levine, and the woman crook arranges for the girl to aid her without letting her know the nature of her task.

There is quite a bit of plot and counterplot of the melodramatic sort, and a love interest that attracts. When matters are brought to a climax and the thieves apprehended, Diana is found to be the daughter of the baron, and has been employed by her father to assist in getting the jewels into the hands of the banker. The male members of the cast consist of Joe Bennett, Frank Leigh, George Pearce, Billy Musgrave and H. D. Dudgeon.

"ARIZONA"

Douglas Fairbanks Projects Himself Through New Version of Stage and Screen Success.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AUGUSTUS THOMAS in his wildest dreams could never have imagined the hero of his play, "Arizona," flying through space like a human cannonball and projecting himself over high walls and into open windows with almost superhuman power. But this is the kind of a fellow Lieutenant Denton is, as acted by Douglas Fairbanks in the new screen version of the Thomas stage success produced by Artcraft. The original play was celebrated for the strength of its story and the excellence of its cast, and the first screen version, which followed the original closely, was also finely acted.

In preparing a second version for the screen, Douglas Fairbanks' idea was to use the plot of "Arizona" as a foundation for a scenario built along the lines of his latest releases. His performance of Lieutenant Denton is not a characterization. The athletic star has, as usual, put his own personality into the picture, and acts Douglas Fairbanks with his customary life-like perfection. A new brand of United States army officer is the result. He is not at all dignified, and shows very little military training, but he beats the cowboys at their own games and keeps everything on the jump all through the plot. "Doug" is still the biggest thing in a Fairbanks picture.

The main theme of the story has been preserved, and the young lieutenant, who is in love with Bonita Canby, works as desperately as ever to save his colonel from disgrace and prevent his wife from running away with a blackguard. Denton, it will be recalled, shields the woman by allowing himself to be thought a thief, and is forced to resign from the army. In the present version he organizes a company of cowboys to help the Allies win the war.

The production is correct as to detail, and brings the atmosphere of Arizona before the eye most vividly. The cast is a fine one. It comprises Theodore Roberts as Candy, Kate Price as Mrs. Canby, Frederick Burton as Colonel Benham, Harry Northrup as Captain Hodgeman, Frank Campeau as Keller, Kathleen Kirkham as Estrella, Marjorie Daw as Bonita, Marguerite de la Motte as Lena, Raymond Hatton as Tony, Robert Boulder as the doctor and Albert McQuarrie as Lieutenant Hatton.

"QUICKSAND"

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A STORY of the innocent young husband, unjustly accused of a crime he never committed, and railroaded to jail by a villainous district leader who is scheming for the ruin of the young wife, is "Quicksand," produced by Thomas H. Ince for Paramount release. "It is grave defect in logic," says a great critic, "to state, or hint at, a problem and then illustrate it in such terms of character that it is solved in advance." This is exactly what "Quicksand" does. The falsely accused story has been told so often that only logical development and careful handling awakens audience interest. In this case the falsely accused young man is of clean character and record. Not a fragment of evidence is produced in the story to justify the accusation, none revealed to the audience at the trial why he should be pronounced guilty. No such issues as the arrest and conviction of an innocent man can convince an audience unless they are shown—at least faintly indicated. There exists no doubt that his innocence will be proved at the end, an end foreseen, and therefore a play without suspense.

In addition to this defect, the story depends on those outworn devices of overheard conversation, the villains discussing their guilt near an open door without looking to see if they are overheard, and the heroine is of course near by to hear their self-incrimination. Then is added the device of the heroine going in evening clothes to a private room in order to get the guilty man drunk, while she throws wine over her shoulder. Finally that standby, the villain's repentant confession, concludes what is easily foreseen from the beginning. The only defense that can be offered for such improbable and unacceptable stuff is that plays by men who not only know how to write for the screen, but who have some idea of the meaning of "drama," are not easy to get. Still a release falling so far below the producer's high standard is to be deplored, because it is well acted and directed, and therefore the more misleading. Poor authorship is entirely to blame. "Quicksand" features Dorothy Dalton.

"THE WILD CAT OF PARIS"

Priscilla Dean Featured in Six-Part Universal Special—Art Mingled with Thrills.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

TO say that this six-part Universal offering, "The Wild Cat of Paris," is interesting is to put the matter too mildly. It develops a story that contains many elements of human appeal, and for the most part has been splendidly presented. There are one or two lapses in continuity at bad places in the closing reel as shown at the Broadway Theatre, and this should by all means be remedied by further editing, as the number is worth every care.

Harvey Gates devised this engrossing narrative of the Paris Apaches, which is punctuated at times by excellent melodramatic detonations. On the whole, the action is in the line of straight drama, and Priscilla Dean, in enacting the role of Collette, the black-eyed wild cat, does some of her best work thus far. Only in the matter of continuity does the number fail to get a firm grip at times. But the effect of the whole is satisfying, and the number may be recommended for its novel and generally inspiring theme.

Collette is a girl of the Apache dives—handy with the knife and the garrote. She is the idol of the band, and beloved by its men. On a raid upon an artist's studio she is made prisoner, the artist keeping her several days. He teaches her to pose, and her soul is awakened by hearing the story of Joan of Arc. In the course of the story she emulates Joan, and leads the Apaches to the battle front.

The picture is notable for its fine settings and atmosphere. Some of the characterizations are slightly overdone, but all are acceptable. In the cast are Louis Darclay, Edward Cecil and Lucille Furness. Joseph DeGrasse directed.

"THE SEA FLOWER"

Juanita Hansen Featured in Strong Five-Reel Bluebird Number Written by George Hull.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, "The Sea Flower," is one of the strongest of recent Bluebird releases. It is based upon a tale in Scribner's by George Hull, whose Western and Hawaiian stories may be recognized for their broad, sympathetic treatment of real life, and who has an unusual gift for atmosphere and characterization. The adaptation was made by H. Tipton Steck, and the production was in charge of Colin Campbell.

Juanita Hansen is cast in the part of Lurline, a girl reared on the island of Moana by "Brandy" Cain, a dissolute beach comber and outcast, who has a native wife. Lurline believes herself to be the daughter of this oddly assorted couple, and it is not until later in the story that Cain reveals the fact that he stole her as a child to revenge himself upon another man.

The hero of the tale is a secret service man named Darnley, capably portrayed by Alfred Whitman. Darnley is thrown from a vessel where he had been shadowing some German conspirators, and is cast up on the beach of Moana in a half-drowned condition. Lurline discovers him, and conveys him to a cave, where she protects him for many days. Later, the girl is forced into a native marriage with a brutal German, and the rest of the story concerns the manner of her deliverance from this man.

The story as a whole is splendidly produced, and carries the interest well. It has little of the crudeness of many sea stories, and the plot and characters are unusual.

Others in the cast are Fred Huntley, Alfred Allen and George Pearce.

"FAIR ENOUGH"

Five-Reel American-Pathe Production Presents Amusing Farcical Mixture.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

PEOPLE who tire of the logical order of most plots and like a light, helter skelter yarn which rambles around in a mixture of comedy, burlesque and farce, will find considerable amusement in this. It features Marguerita Fisher as Ann Dickson, daughter of a newly rich family who are trying to break into high society. Jack Mower plays the role of Carey Phelan, a wealthy young man, who joins the police force in order to make himself useful.

The scenes are nearly all taken in the city streets, where Ann's auto knocks over a newsboy. The boy fortunately is not seriously hurt, and she afterward takes him and his friends on a picnic to the beach. Much space is given to these interesting events, showing Carey always on the job as cop, and picturing the way he learns to love Ann, who, of course, does not suspect him of being a man of wealth. Two other individuals who play important parts are Carey's valet, an ex-gunman, played realistically by Bull Montana, and Harry McCoy as "Freddie," the young society man Ann's parents have selected for her.

At the beach Ann is arrested for stealing an auto. Her parents, who came to the beach after her, are also arrested for a slight offense, and all hands arrive at the police station, where Carey adjusts matters after some fairly entertaining complications.

The number was written by J. Anthony Roche and directed by Edward Sloman. Others in the cast are Eugenia Forde, Alfred Hollingsworth, Alice Knowland, Harry McCoy and J. Farrell McDonald.

"HOARDED ASSETS"

Vitagraph Production with Harry Morey as Hero of Novel but Unconvincing Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

RAYMOND B. SPEARS, author of the Vitagraph picture, "Hoarded Assets," gets a fine start for his story, and several of his situations are well out of the ordinary. In working out his plot, however, he often follows the line of least resistance. Jerry Rufus, the hero of "Hoarded Assets," is a river pirate who is big and strong enough to support himself by honest work. He is in love with an actress in a small stock company who has many wealthy admirers. Jerry thinks that the girl will never accept him unless he has money.

By a clumsily devised bit of construction he is able to steal a number of kegs containing two hundred thousand dollars worth of gold. Jerry sinks the treasure near the home up the Hudson he buys for his hoped-for bride, and then asks the lady to marry him. She agrees, and turns her back on her old admirers. Jerry and she are very happy. The newly-made wife thinks her husband has always been an honest man, and Jerry goes straight after he takes a partner for life.

The couple are not left to enjoy their bliss undisturbed. An old admirer of Mrs. Rufus visits her, and tells her that Jerry has been a thief and has stored away his gains. To test him, the wife pretends she is discontented from want of money. Jerry digs up one of the sunken kegs, intending to give her the funds she has asked for. He is watched by a detective who has long been on his trail. The keg contains sand. Jerry stole the wrong kegs. The detective is disappointed. Jerry is astonished; then, thankful that he fooled himself. The wife concludes to make the best of things, and Jerry promises to stick to the honest road.

Most of the characters have a curious moral vision, to say the least. Paul Scardon's direction is carelessly done at times. Harry Morey is just the build for Jerry, and acts with the necessary vigor and shading of character. Betty Blythe as Claire, George Majeroni as James Barr, Robert Gaillard as Detective Ryan and Jean Paige as Patsy are equal to all demands.

"DOLLY'S VACATION"

Five-Reel Diando-Pathe Pictures Two Juveniles on a Riot in the Country.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SELDOM does a five-reel number contain as little plot as this Diando-Pathe release entitled "Dolly's Vacation." And perhaps after all more plot would have ruined some of the exuberant humor that crops out of the very natural, life-like scenes depicted here. It features Baby Marie Osborne and the little darky, Sambo, on a visit to a big farm, and most of the number is given up to the pranks they play and the mischief they get into. It might almost be called Sambo's picture, for the scenes in which he flees from his wrathful mammy, winding up by locking her in a chicken house, are certainly the funniest of all, and will convulse any audience.

Baby Marie appears as Dolly McKenzie, daughter of a factory owner and his wife. Her mother has artistic inclinations, and neglects both husband and daughter. The latter, having strike troubles at his place of business, sends Dolly to visit his brother in the country, accompanied by Sambo and his mammy. The brother, Howard McKenzie, finds his hands full with the two children, who are up to all sorts of mischief from the time they reach the farm.

After some varied and amusing exploits, the children finally wander off and get lost in the woods, and the final scenes have to do with the extended search for them and their final recovery. There is also a reunion between Dolly's parents at the close.

The number is amusing throughout, though slight in plot. It was written by Mrs. George Griffin Lee and directed by William Bertram. The cast also includes Jack Connolly, Bert Wilson and Bob Gray.

"LITTLE MISS HOOVER"

Marguerite Clark in Amusing Propaganda Picture Produced by Paramount.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FOR the first five minutes of "Little Miss Hoover" the laughs are as thick as plums in a Christmas pudding. Marguerite Clark as Nancy Craddock, a Washington society girl, goes into the chicken raising business, and her lack of information as to the domestic habits of her live stock makes her insist upon buying nothing but hens. This incident is very funny.

The picture is a screen version of Maria Thompson Davies' story, "The Golden Bird," and was directed by John S. Robertson. The scenario is the work of Adrian Gil-Spear. As the title indicates, food propaganda is the theme. Like all pictures that are written for the purpose of furthering some special phase of war activities or its consequence, "The Golden Bird" is rather choppy as to incident, but it points out the necessity for this country to produce all the food possible, and has a love romance that will please.

The chicken raising scenes are amusing, especially the one where the heroine takes a number of eggs to bed with her and wakes up in the morning to find the bed full of little chicks. While there may be some subtle connection between chickens and tar and feathers, the attempt to create dramatic interest by introducing a deep-laid plot to treat the hero to a suit of feathers and a ride on a rail is dragged in by the heels. It simply doesn't belong in the story. The hero is a United States Army officer, who has been appointed by the Commissioner of Agriculture to investigate conditions in the district where Nancy Craddock has her farm. He keeps his identity a secret, and everyone, including the heroine, thinks he is a slacker. When he comes back to town in full uniform everyone feels cheap, but the heroine accepts the officer just the same.

Marguerite Clark presents a style of farmerette that would make life in the rural districts very attractive. She is ably supported by Eugene O'Brien, Alfred Hickman, Forrest Robertson, Hal Reid, Frances Kaye, John Tansey, J. M. Mason and J. J. Williams.

"UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE"

Elsie Ferguson in Arteraft Production of Romantic Comedy That Is Mildly Entertaining.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE array of names connected with the Arteraft picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree," is an imposing one. Taken from H. V. Esmond's stage play, scenario by Adrian Gil-Spear, directed by Emile Chautard and the leading character acted by Elsie Ferguson, this five-part romantic comedy promises excellent entertainment. Many of its scenes and situations fulfill that promise. The reason it fails always to entertain is because the author has not kept close to the spirit of unreality that should serve to excuse some of the material of the plot.

A cultivated young woman who is overburdened with wealth and overrun with suitors may be excused for wanting to get away from it all and become "loose an' free," as the old darkey called it. But when she makes up her mind to buy a caravan and turn gypsy, there is no reason for not having her actions plausible or else giving them the airy treatment that the most irresponsible romance will allow.

There are a number of scenes in the forest where Mary Hamilton pitches her camp that are very beautiful, those by moonlight being among the best. Mary's meeting with Jack Hutton, the fortunate young man, who wooes her for herself alone, is novel, to say the least. Mary exchanges her gypsy costume for a well-fitting bathing suit, and goes down to the pond to bathe. Jack spies her in the water, throws off his coat and dives into the water himself. Mary pretends to need his help, and Jack is not at all slow in seizing her in his arms. Other romantic adventures take place, including an attack on the heroine by three male gypsies and a gallant rescue by the hero, who puts up a stiff fight, and is rewarded by the grateful Mary's consent when he asks her to marry him.

Elsie Ferguson looks and acts her part most agreeably. Eugene O'Brien as Jack Hutton is equally satisfying. The other members of the competent cast are Edward Burns, Mildred Havens, John Ardizoni, Robert Milach, Robert Vivian, Charles Craig, Henry Warwick and James Fury.

"THE SPENDER"

Bert Lytell Star of Cheerful Metro Picture Splendidly Cast and Acted.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

HERE'S another Saturday Evening Post story worthy of a hearty welcome to the screen. Recalling "Skinner's Dress Suit" (and, yet, utterly unlike it), with a dash of "The Christmas Carol" (still entirely different), "The Spender" will bring a refreshing hour to the picture patron. Everyone who sees this newest Bert Lytell Metro will leave the theatre happy in the realization that they have been really entertained and refreshed by their adventure. (For it is an adventure these days to turn screenward.)

The plot is swift and sure, leading the observer through the rejuvenation of a millionaire who has become so immersed in moneymaking that he sees nothing save "gain" in any phase of life. His nephew, and heir presumptive, abandons his chances in his determination to open the old man's heart to the joy of living. In doing this we see the transition from a miserly condition to the opening of a kindly heart to the sunshine of existence.

There is a mild sort of a "villain" in the case who is spending the firm's money on a favored "vampire." In making good his peculations, or attempting to do so, there results an exciting robbery scene, with the downfall of villainy. There is a pretty little love theme to sustain "heart interest," and in the happiness of all hands at the finish the observer joins with fervent gratification.

Mr. Lytell and Mary Anderson play the principals, and do well indeed. But the honors of the presentation go to Thomas Jefferson, for a remarkably true and skillful performance, and to William Mong, who also vastly benefits the occasion through finished acting.

The moving picture business would reap golden benefits if there were more frequent offerings so wholesome, natural and human as "The Spender."

"ALL OF A SUDDEN NORMA"

Bessie Barriscale in Five-Part Comedy Act Its Breezy Heroine with Proper Spirit.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

OPENING with a suicide, "All of a Sudden Norma," quickly shakes off this depressing atmosphere and goes after a more enlivening sort of entertainment. Produced by B. B. Features and directed by Howard Hickman, this Bessie Barriscale picture is released through Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, the Robinson-Cole Company controlling all rights. Thomas Edgelow wrote the story, and Jack Cunningham supplied the scenario.

The comedy has a plot that will not stand very close examination. To admit that any young woman would act as Norma of the hasty actions behaves in the story is a concession on the part of the spectator which makes things much easier for the author. Once this point is granted, the line of adventure which follows is always amusing, even if it is not impressive. The fact that Bessie Barriscale works intelligently and with considerable personal charm and that the direction and support are further aids to the picture contribute largely to "All of a Sudden Norma's" good qualities.

Norma Brisbane imagines she will always have all the money she wants, until her father's suicide reveals the unpleasant truth that he is bankrupt. Whereupon his impulsive daughter determines to get hold of money in the quickest and easiest way. She makes Cuthbert Van Zelt pretend to be her husband, and hustles him off to a week-end party, where the pickings look good. The Duke of Duffield, one of the guests, is engaged to the daughter of the hostess. He exhibits some family jewels, and Norma steals into his room that night and nips the stones from under his pillow. She discovers they are paste, and puts them back. The duke wakes up and finds her in his room. Norma pretends to be a sleep-walker. Later on, the duke gets her to steal some papers from one of her father's creditors, who is trying to fleece the nobleman. A good looking young chap named Oliver Garret ousts the supposed husband, Cuthbert, and it is hoped Norma puts an end to her sleep-walking and her stealing after they are married.

Joseph Dowling, Albert Colby, R. Henry Grey, Frank Leigh and Belbourne McDowell are members of the cast.

"THE SEA WAIF"

Five-Reel World Picture Features Louise Huff in Simple Seacoast Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN this five-reel subject, "The Sea Waif," the author, Lieutenant Howard Irving Young, has devised a plot of great simplicity, which has been presented throughout with a tendency to melodrama. It cannot be said that any of the situations possess any great originality or dramatic strength, though the climax is a quite exciting one of its kind. The developments of the story have unfortunately been foreshadowed in such a way as to rob the plot of any great element of surprise; in other words, it is always quite obvious what the outcome will be.

At the same time this is a feature that we believe will have considerable general appeal despite its lack of dramatic effect. Its simplicity is in its favor, though marred by crude presentation in many instances. It has for its heroine Louise Huff, a dainty screen performer, who plays the role of Nancy Potter, and the hero is John Bowers, who appears as Harry Caton, a popular idol of the musical comedy stage.

Nancy has been reared by Cail Potter, a rough fisherman, and is beloved by Silas Jones. The girl does not love the latter, though he is her father's friend. But she does fall in love with Harry Caton, who has been ordered to the seacoast to rest his throat after a breakdown on the stage. The plot concerns the birth of Nancy, who is in reality the daughter of the wealthy Colonel Brett. She had been lost in a wreck when still a baby and taken home by Potter. In the course of the story, Caton wins her love, and helps establish her identity as Colonel Brett's daughter.

The production was adapted to the screen by Harry O. Hoyt and Hamilton Smith, and directed by Frank Reicher. Others in the cast are Henry Warwick, Anthony Merlo, Robert Broderick, Clay Clement, Jr., Florence Malone, Louise Reinhart, T. Tamamato, Charles Dewey and Helen Russell.

"A LADY'S NAME"

Constance Talmadge Has Sprightly Role in Select Production of Amusing Comedy.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CYRIL HARCOURT, who wrote "A Pair of Silk Stockings," is the author of "A Lady's Name," a Select picture, with Constance Talmadge in her favorite line of characters. As Mabel Vere, a writing young woman, who advertises for a husband in order to make first-hand studies of new types for her latest novel, the sprightliest of the Select stars is given a part that fits her to perfection.

The story is English, and the situations are the outcome of the class distinction of the British Isles. They are none-the-less amusing for that reason, although the picture does not have the lively action which has contributed so much to the fun of several of the Constance Talmadge releases. Directed by Walter Edwards, the scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers and the photography by James C. Van Trees, "A Lady's Name" is in every way an excellent production.

Mabel, the novelist, is already engaged to Gerald Wantage, when she decides to advertise for a husband. There are several applicants, who are kept in their places when they call by a strong-arm woman companion, one of the would-be husbands being thrown out bodily for not displaying the proper amount of polish.

Another of the applicants is a modest little man, who confesses that he is a butler. He invites Mabel to tea at his master's house while that gentleman is absent. She accepts. After arriving at the house she finds that its master is Noel Corcoran, another suitor who had called to offer himself. Noel and Gerald are members of the same club, and Noel had answered the advertisement on a bet. At the end of the story Gerald is given back his ring, and Noel places another one on Mabel's finger.

Harrison Ford as Noel Corcoran, Emory Johnson as Gerald Wantage, Vera Doria as Maud Bray and Fred Huntley as Adams are the principal members of the support.

"THE DRIFTERS"

Jesse D. Hampton Presents J. Warren Kerrigan in Five-Reel Alaskan Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is strong dramatic plot interest in this five-reel subject, "The Drifters," presented by Jesse D. Hampton and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The presentation is not without faults, as there is considerable repetition, and the scenes do not always carry the Alaskan atmosphere, but the situations are sufficiently unique as to hold the interest.

The opening situation in particular is one to grasp the attention quickly. Three men are pictured occupying a cabin in the gold-digging region of the Yukon. Neither of them is well known to the other, and the observer scarcely suspects the dramatic possibilities until the story begins unfolding. The coming of the girl is also an unusual feature, her presence being amply accounted for later by the plot developments.

J. Warren Kerrigan has the role of Burke Marston, one of the three men in the cabin. He has come to the North country to forget, and is addicted to periodical drinking. He is looking for the man who robbed his mother and brought about her death. The mysterious girl is also searching for the man who sent her brother to prison unjustly. It is in line with good dramatic usage that one of the men in the cabin, Evan Mears, should prove to be the individual who committed both crimes, and later in the story justice is visited upon him. Not quite the amount of suspense is achieved that might have been expected, due no doubt to a certain stringing out of the story at times, but the story has holding strength.

The cast includes William Conklin, Casson Ferguson, Lois Wilson and Walter Perry. The story was written by Kenneth B. Clarke and directed by Jesse D. Hampton.

COMMENTS

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE SEA FLOWER (Bluebird).—A strong five-reel subject, adapted by H. Tipton Steck from a story by George Hull, and directed by Colin Campbell. Juanita Hansen and Alfred Whitman lead a good cast. The characterization and atmosphere are excellent and the plot an absorbing one. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

SHE HIRED A HUSBAND (Bluebird).—A five-reel number of the light, romantic type, written by Rex Taylor and directed by Jack Dillon. Priscilla Dean heads an agreeable cast. The plot is rather preposterous and does not carry conviction at all times, yet the number as a whole has an enjoyable quality. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Exclusive Features, Inc.

TWISTED TRAILS (Exclusive).—This two-reel re-issue, featuring Tom Mix, is an interesting offering, filled with action. It was reviewed at length in our last issue.

THE MAN WITHIN (Exclusive).—Another of the Tom Mix two-reel pictures made by Selig and now being re-issued by Exclusive Features, Inc. Like "Twisted Trails," the story is told in a direct manner, without any superfluous footage, and should prove entertaining in the majority of houses. Reviewed at length in our last issue.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE (Artcraft).—Elsie Ferguson plays an heiress, who turns gypsy in order to escape the suitors who are after her money. The picture is excellently produced. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

ARIZONA (Artcraft).—This is an entirely new screen version of the Augustus Thomas play, with Douglas Fairbanks in the character of the hero and doing his usual remarkable athletic stunts. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE ETERNAL CITY (Paramount).—A five-part screen version of Hall Caine's novel, with scenes taken in Rome and London. The picture is one of the Success Series now being released. Pauline Frederick is starred. The story is highly romantic. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

QUICKSANDS (Paramount-Ince).—Below the standard of Paramount-Ince productions, though Dorothy Dalton and a good cast do their best with a story lacking in suspense. The hero, falsely accused and convicted on no evidence, is rescued by the villain's confession.

THE VILLAGE CHESTNUT (Paramount-Sennett).—An attempt on the part of Chester Conklin and Louis Fazenda to extract fun from a stupid farce. They work hard enough, but the action is forced, lacking originality and not even humorous.

LITTLE MISS HOOVER (Paramount).—Marguerite Clark plays an attractive style of farmerette in this five-part picture, which was made from "The Golden Bird," a story by Maria Thompson Davies. Eugene O'Brien is the leading man. A longer review is printed elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

CAUGHT IN THE ACT (Fox).—A strong example of farce-comedy, adapted by Raymond Schrock from a story by Fred Jackson and directed by Harry Millard. Peggy Hyland, Leslie Austen and Wally McKeown head an excellent cast. The situations are rather broad but delicately and humorously handled. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE SON OF A HUN (Sunshine Comedy).—A riotous two-reel comic, with Gertrude Selby, Dave Morris and Lloyd Hamilton in the cast. This begins with a wedding and winds up with a burlesque battle. There is a Ford car in this that is funnier than any Ford joke ever succeeded in being. The knockabout humor is rough but acceptable, and many laughable stunts are performed. The work of the tank, which completely demolishes a house, is a good feature.

Exhibitors-Mutual.

ALL OF A SUDDEN NORMA (B. B. Features).—Bessie Barriscale is the star of this five-part comedy which is well acted. The story is not convincing, but will serve to amuse. It is directed by Howard Hickman. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

A PERFECT 36 (Goldwyn).—A five-reel subject, by Tex Charwate, directed by Charles Giblyn. This is a successful offering of the humorous type, featuring Mabel Normand as a boarding house drudge, who becomes a shirt waist saleslady and has some amusing adventures on the road. It has rather a slight plot, but is very funny in spots. It gives the heroine also a chance to do some clever diving stunts. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

HOARDED ASSETS (Vitagraph).—Harry Morey plays a river pirate in this five-part story that has novelty of plot but is not well put together. The acting is satisfactory. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE MAN-EATER (Vitagraph).—Chapter 8 of the Vitagraph serial of circus life, "The Iron Test," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, finds the Red Mask still keeping up his attempts to kill both of the acrobats. After being thrown off the circus train while in his van, Bert is caught in a shack and bound to a table and a heavy charge of powder arranged to blow him to pieces. He is rescued just in time and the shack is sent flying in a thousand bits. At the end of the chapter Edith finds herself cornered in the tent by a lion, which the Red Mask has let out of its cage.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

SURRENDER OF THE GERMAN FLEET (Jewel Special).—An excellent screen review of about 1,400 feet, picturing the ignominious surrender of the great German fleet. The vessels are shown at close range and the whole is a worthy record of the tremendous event itself. King George is shown visiting Admirals Sims and Rodman on board the U. S. S. New York. Surrendered submarines are also shown.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

SYLVIA ON A SPREE (Metro), Dec. 16.—An excellent polite comedy subject, written by E. Forst and June Mathis, and directed by Harry L. Franklin. Emmy Wehlen has the leading role, that of a well-bred, sheltered girl, whose lover cures her of a desire to see bohemian life, in an amusing way. This is exceptionally clever and well presented. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE SPENDER (Metro).—Every screen in the country should welcome this happy creation of Bert Lytell and his supporting company, including Thomas Jefferson and William Mong. We particularly mention the two assisting principals because of their skilful representations. "The Spender" runs lightly and pleasingly through five reels of cleverness in entertainment. It leaves the spectator refreshed and rejoiced because there are no heavy "problems," very little of "villainy," and much of the good of life and joy of living in its psychology. Moving pictures, as a whole, would benefit immeasurably if pictures like "The Spender" could be shown more often. This Metro release will delight every class of patron and should reach wide distribution for the good of the picture business.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW (Pathe).—This issue, No. 23, opens with a graphic view of Italian flame-throwers in action, followed by a massed infantry attack. Other features concern the fighting in and about St. Quentin and Cambrai. A number of scenes from the German naval surrender close the installment.

DOLLY'S VACATION (Diando-Pathe).—A five-reel juvenile subject, featuring Baby Marie Osborne and the small colored boy, Sambo. This time they visit a big farm and get into all sorts of mischief. Sambo's exploits are particularly funny. There is not much plot to this, but it is extremely natural and amusing. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BORNEO (Post Film-Pathe).—A new travel subject, picturing the island of Borneo, the third largest island in the world. This is the land of the Dyaks, a very interesting savage tribe, now quite highly civilized in certain respects. The glimpses of native life, animals, industries and customs are all instructive.

TOWER OF TEARS (Pathe).—Episode No. 12 of "Wolves of Kulter." One of the best installments yet shown from the standpoint of adventure. The stunts performed by Alice and Bob, in climbing down the trestle work of the high bridge and later in canoeing down the rapids, are full of intense interest.

SHE LOVES ME NOT (Rolin-Pathe).—Another very funny comic, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. This takes them all on an excursion to Measle Hollow, the two former going in a box car filled with hoboes. The fun is of the knockabout sort and very laughable.

FAIR ENOUGH (American-Pathe).—A five-reel number, written by J. Anthony Roche and directed by Edward Sloman, which features Margarita Fisher and Jack Mowrer. The girl is a daughter of some social climbers, the hero a young millionaire who joins the police force. The situations are amusing in an absurd, farcical way and will no doubt have considerable appeal. The concoction as a whole is just pleasant nonsense. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

CHECK YOUR BAGGAGE (Rolin-Pathe).—A comic subject of fair strength, featuring Toto as baggage agent at a station. He tries to save the company funds and ropes the real inspector, letting the crook escape. The fun is of the knockabout sort and about of average quality.

BETWIXT HEAVEN AND EARTH (Pathe).—Episode No. 11 of "The Wolves of Kulter." This installment is devoted almost entirely to the struggles of Alice and Bob with Carter and his friend Walker. Alice escapes from an attic room and is pursued in the woods, where Bob joins her. They are driven onto a high bridge at the close, with the enemy at one end and an approaching train at the other.

THE FORTUNES OF CORINNE (Pathe).—A two-reel subject, featuring Baby Gloria Joy. She is adopted by some parsimonious relatives and has but little fun in life until she meets a tramp philosopher. She later starts out for the "open road" herself, accompanied by a dog and goose. This is quite a pleasing little subject, though not particularly strong in plot. The humor is delicate and enjoyable.

CELEBES (Post Film-Pathe).—A travel subject of interest, picturing scenes on an island in the Dutch Malaysia group, with a population of some 1,250,000. The natives resemble the Javanese to a great extent and this shows their various activities in the way of work and play.

Harry Rapf.

WANTED FOR MURDER (Harry Rapf).—A five-reel story of the great war, written by S. Jay Kaufman and directed by Frank H. Crane. Elaine Hammerstein and Charles Raven have the leading roles—a French girl and an American soldier behind the German lines. The story is full of realism and contains many human incidents. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Select Pictures Corporation.

A LADY'S NAME (Select).—Founded on a stage play by Cyril Harcourt, this five-part picture gives Constance Talmadge one of those bright and attractive young girl parts which she plays so well. It is about a story-writing young woman who advertises for a husband. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Pictures Corporation.

CROWN JEWELS (Triangle).—Featuring Claire Anderson, this five-part picture is a story of international crooks and their efforts to steal some crown jewels that are sent to this country. The story is interesting. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Company.

THE WILD CAT OF PARIS (Universal Special).—A six-part number, written by Harvey Gates and directed by Joseph De Grasse. This features Priscilla Dean as a girl of the Apache dives in Paris. She hears the story of Joan of Arc and leads the Apaches into battle. The number is both dramatic and melodramatic and artistically presented. It contains one or two bad breaks in continuity, but is splendidly entertaining. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS, NO. 6 (Universal).—In this number Eddie crosses over a cable between two mountains with Dynamite Dan on his back, both falling to the water when the cable is shot in two. Another big stunt is that performed by Eileen Sedgwick as Alice Page in the "balloon horse" act. Eddie's enemies at the close lock him in a leopard's cage.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS, NO. 7 (Universal).—This installment opens with Eddie struggling hand-to-hand with a leopard in its cage. Some interesting circus acts follow, and later Eddie rides into a crowd of fighting gamblers on the back of an elephant, the latter dispersing the men with a club. The final scenes picture Eddie leading a half-dozen men to help his father at the derrick.

IT'S GREAT TO BE CRAZY (Nestor).—A two-reel comic, featuring Stanley Laurel as a young man who gets a job as attendant at an insane asylum. This is full of knockabout situations, but there is no very definite trend to the various happenings, and much of the action is lacking in point. The number is only fairly interesting.

WOLVES OF THE RANGE (Western).—A two-reel number with Helen Gibson and Lee Hall in the cast. This is a story of the Western range and abounds in fast riding and picturesque scenic effect. The plot, which deals with a band of outlaws, is rather conventional and contains considerable melodrama that is not entirely convincing. Its chief strength is in its picturesque atmosphere.

STRAIGHT CROOKS (Star).—A comedy subject, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran as two young men just out of the penitentiary. They get jobs in a bank and the re-appearance of their former pal gives them much trouble. In protecting the bank funds they lock the president and the new bank examiner in the safe. This is well handled and gets over in good shape.

World Pictures Corporation.

THE SEA WAIF (World-Picture).—A five-reel subject, written hy Lieut. Howard Irving Young and directed by Frank Reicher. Louise Huff and John Bowers play the principal roles, the plot being a simple story of the seacoast, with a melodramatic finish. The situations are not particularly strong in this, but it tells a rather pleasant little story of a quite obvious type. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE LOVE NET (World-Picture).—A strong five-reel story of the seacoast, written by Bertha A. Backus and directed by Tefft Johnson. Madge Evans, Jack Drumier, Charles Sutton, W. T. Carleton and Kate Lester have the leading roles. The yarn is unusually good, has a genuine heart interest and some excellent humor. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Dentists See "Crusaders."

"Pershing's Crusaders," distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the Committee on Public Information, was the stellar attraction in the entertainment provided at the recent convention in Providence of the Northeastern Dental Association, composed of dentists from practically every city and town in New York State and New England.

Unique Scene in Alice Brady Picture.

There is in the forthcoming Alice Brady feature to be released by Select during December a scene which is unique in dramatic literature. The genius of George Barr McCutcheon—author of the novel, "In the Hollow of Her Hand," from which the photoplay which bears the same name has been made—is responsible for this distinctly novel treatment of an intensely dramatic plot.

Several times in recent years substantial sums have been paid for dramatic rights to "In the Hollow of Her Hand."

Alice Brady has the role of a young English girl who comes to America to seek work. An excellent cast supports her, including Myrtle Stedman, A. J. Herbert, Percy Marmont, Harold Entwistle and Mrs. Louise Clark.

This is the second of Alice Brady's pictures in which Charles Maigne both directed and prepared the scenario. He will direct Miss Brady in a number of subjects released by Select.

"The Captain's Captain" (Vitagraph).

A surprise is promised the film public in viewing a forthcoming Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, "The Captain's Captain," which is the second offering in the Alice Joyce star series. Miss Joyce reveals herself as an excellent comedienne, according to reports emanating from the Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio, where the picture was completed under Tom Terriss' direction. It is scheduled for release on December 30. An unusual supporting cast has been provided for Miss Joyce, comprising Arthur Donaldson, Percy Standing, Julia Swayne Gordon, Eulalie Jensen and Maurice Costello.

"The Captain's Captain" is adapted from the novel, "Cap'n Abe—Storekeeper," by James A. Cooper. It deals with life in a fishing village, affording singular pictorial opportunities. Types characteristic to such localities are pictured with exact verity, and the romance of life in the quaint Cape Cod town is eloquently impressed in every reel.

Barriscale Picture Released January 5.

Bessie Barriscale's first production, "All of a Sudden, Norma," made by her own company, the B. B. Features, Inc., for distribution through the Exhibitors' Mutual, will be released on January 5. This is the first of eight pictures in which Miss Barriscale will be presented during the coming year.

The picture was directed by Howard Hickman. Included in the east are Joseph Dowling, Albert Colby, R. Henry Grey, Frank Leigh and Melbourne McDowell.

Exhibitors Complete Deposit Plans.

The Exhibitors' Mutual Film Corporation has completed its banking arrangements for handling advance deposits made by exhibitors. As the Robertson-Cole Company has arranged with the Exhibitors' Mutual organization to distribute all of its film purchases, it also becomes the banker for the exhibitors. Accounts have been opened in each city containing an Exhibitors' Mutual Exchange, and as soon as the advance money is received it is deposited to the credit of the Robertson-Cole Company, who become guarantors that service will be rendered or money refunded.

Robertson-Cole Buys Selig Library.

Four hundred books, plays and stories have been purchased by the Robertson-Cole Company from William Selig. This collection is known as the Selig Library, and contains works by some of the biggest authors in this country and England. They were gathered by Mr. Selig during his many years in the motion picture business.

The scenario department of Robertson-Cole will scenarioize these works, and will turn them over to the producers who are making pictures for them. It is believed there is enough material in the library to supply plays for several years. This does not mean that stories will not be purchased. The Robertson-Cole Company will continue to be in the market for good material.

Bessie Love's Third Vitagraph Announced.

"The Wishing Ring Man" is to be Bessie Love's next picture in Vitagraph's star series. It will be Miss Love's third Vitagraph release. Her director, David Smith, has given his star countless opportunities for unique characterizations. The picture is to be released on February 24. It is based on a story by Margaret Widdemer.

The immediate interest of exhibitors, however, will centre on "The Enchanted Barn," which is about to be released. In Shirley Hollister, Bessie Love finds a role that fits her personality. She is a working girl, but not a drub. She has imagination, which is the godmother of realization.

The picture was made at Vitagraph's West Coast studios, and concerned with it besides Miss Love were J. Frank Glendon, Joseph Singleton, William T. Horne, Frank Butterworth, Della Wolbert, Garvey A. Walker and Jane Hathaway.

"The Married Virgin" (Maxwell).

Chosen for their peculiar adaptability to the roles which they have chosen to portray in "The Married Virgin," Maxwell productions announces three leading players in the feature offering who are already prime favorites with the motion picture public. Kathleen Kirkham, Vera Sisson and Rodolfe di Valentina are seen as principals in the story by Hayden Talbot.

General Film Company has "The Married Virgin" under distribution at its principal exchanges, and lively interest is being manifested in the feature.

"Stolen Orders" Going Over.

William A. Brady's "Stolen Orders" is proving a box office magnet of exceptional strength wherever shown. It was an opening attraction at Loew's new Metropolitan Theatre in Brooklyn, and its remarkable success there has been duplicated in the other theatres of the Loew Circuit. An exceptionally well executed melodrama, its story is one that thrills and holds. While in no sense a war picture, "Stolen Orders" is a production of interest that is not only timely, but lasting. The substantial success it has achieved in this country is being duplicated all over the world, for the Brady production is an international success, and is now being shown all the way from Pekin to Paris.

Author and Director Collaborate.

Co-operation between author and director is an important element in the intelligent production of films. Recognizing this fact, James Vincent, who is picturizing James Mott Hallowell's book, "The Spirit of Lafayette," suggested to Mr. Hallowell, whose home is in Boston, that he come to New York to view the taking of some of the big scenes.

Mr. Hallowell immediately fell in with the idea, and this week at the Ideal studios, Cliffside, N. J., Director Vincent handled the megaphone in some of the first scenes of the play. The author expressed his complete satisfaction with the progress being made on the picture.

Work Progressing on Bushman-Bayne Picture.

Tidings seeping into the Vitagraph offices from "somewhere on Long Island" tell of consistent progress in the filming of the Bushman-Bayne special. The play, which is the first of four big features announced for release by Vitagraph this year, springs from the pens of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, the author. Henri Houry is the director.

Meanwhile, the physician wins fame and fortune and removes to a smaller town, where he builds for his little daughter a fable of a beautiful mother who died. Marion sinks so low in the social scale that she comes to blackmail the successful physician, but she meets instead her daughter, and the girl's faith in her mother turns her from her purpose, unwilling to shatter that beautiful ideal, but later, to save the girl from the same false step, she bares her soul and finds moral rebirth in sacrifice.

Feature Mary Boland as Marion Farnham and Raymond Bloomer as Dr. Farnham.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Edith Barnard Delano's Popular Story, "Flaming Ramparts," Translated to the Screen.
Heart Rending Tribulations of a Weakling Mother.
Tense Drama of Great Human Interest Skilfully Revealed.
Greatest of Modern Problems Translated to the Screen.
The Depth of Mother Love Plus Embittered Repentance.

Advertising Angles: Play up the forceful story rather than the individual players, though use should be made of the leading members of the cast. Centre on the situation in which Marion finds herself and meet a possible criticism by calling it the new East Lynne. You can make a strong drive on this by working through the clergy, explaining to them the story and asking their co-operation in bringing the lesson home.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Herald plates, press book, one and two-column ad and scene cuts, slides, eight 8x10, eight 11x14 photos and two 22x28 photos of star.

"DANGER, GO SLOW"

Universal Presents Mae Murray in a Charming Story of a Girl Derelict Who Posed as a Boy but Was a Very Human Girl After All.

Cast.

Muggsy Mulane.....Mae Murray
Jimmy, "The Eel".....Jack Mulhall
Aunt Sarah.....Lydia Knott
Judge Cotton.....Joseph Girard
Bud.....Lon Chaney

Directed by Robert Leonard.

The Story: Muggsy Mulane is a girl of the slums who masquerades as a boy. She is one of the gang of crooks of which Jimmy, "The Eel," is a member. In a police raid the gang is scattered, Jimmy alone being arrested. Muggsy takes a freight out of town, and a couple of days later makes a small village, where she is befriended by Aunt Sarah, whom she finds to be Jimmy's mother. Muggsy resumes the garment of her own sex, saves Aunt Sarah from the foreclosure of a mortgage by blackmailing the holder of the deed, starts a rumor that sells half of the property for more money than Aunt Sarah can realize, and finally brings Jimmy back to his mother—and all because a railroad sign read "Danger—Go Slow."

Feature Mae Murray as Muggsy Mulane and Jack Mulhall as Jimmy, "The Eel."

Program and Advertising Phrases: Mae Murray in Dual Role Plays Boy and Girl Who Save a Benefactor's Fortune.
How a Reformed Crook Brought Happiness to His Aged Mother.
There's a Lot of Good in the Worst of Us and Bad in the Best of Us.
How a City Waif Brought Happiness to Her Village Benefactress.
Great Human Interest Story Revealed in Delightful Photoplay.

Advertising Angles: With very little work you can make some crossing signs with the lettering of the title. If you can make a proper cut-out, use one in the lobby with the figure of Muggsy looking at the sign. You can work the same idea in the newspapers with type and rule work, and it will work better than a straight cut. Hammer on the star, of course, and tell that she makes a very engaging boy.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Players' cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.

"BEYOND THE LAW"

The Southern Feature Film Corporation Presents Emmett Dalton in His Own Powerful and Romantic Story, Orlginally Appearing in the Wide World Magazine.

Cast.

Frank Dalton.....Emmett Dalton
Bob Dalton.....Emmett Dalton
Grat Dalton.....William Dunn
Eugenia Moore.....Mabel Bordine
William McElhanie.....Jack O'Loughlin
Charles Bryant.....Dick Clark
Ruth Lane.....Virginia Lee

The Story: The story tells how the Dalton boys, originally United States deputy marshals, resign because of a dishoncst superior. They go to New Mexico, and one night they hold up a gambling den because they have been robbed by a crooked roulette wheel. The act brands them as outlaws, and they scatter. Grat Dalton, because of this escapade, is supposed to be connected with a train robbery, and the persecution of the Wells-Fargo officials lead the boys to acts of reprisal, which end with the famous robbery of the bank at Coffeyville, Kansas, where all but Emmett Dalton are killed. He is convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment, but is released through the efforts of his mother and sweetheart.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Thrilling Details of Great Story of Bandit Adventures with Real Outlaw Star of the Occasion.

Here's the Real Story of the Notorious Dalton Gang in Screen Drama.
Wild Life on the Western Plains Recalled in Vivid Screen Drama.

Advertising Angles: Don't make the mistake of handling this like a dramatized dime novel. Work rather on the opposite angle. Tell that it is not a dime novel, but the life story of a little band of men who were driven to desperate deeds through oppression. Hook up with the stories in the Wide World and the Saturday Evening Post. The former is the more recent and the basis of this story, so work more upon this end. In all your advertising make it plain that this is a warning against crime and not an incentive to robbery.

"GOOD-BYE, BILL"

Adolph Zukor Presents Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex in the Latest Scintillant Comedy by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

Cast.

Elsie Dresser.....Shirley Mason
Teddy Swift.....Ernest Truex
Kaiser William the Nut.....Joseph Allen
Willie, his funny son.....Carl de Planta
Herr Dresser.....Joseph Burke
Herr Tonik.....H. E. Koser
Count Von Born Effry-Minutt, Herbert Frank

Directed by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

The Story: Samson's strength was in his hair, but the Kaiser trusted to his whiskers, and the bristling hairs, upturned like the headgear of a longhorn cow, was the secret of his power. And the secret of the whiskers was a "moustache fixer," invented by a loyal Hun named Dresser, who lived in West Hoboken, N. J., which used to be regarded as a suburb of Berlin. Dresser had to go to Berlin to brace up the whiskers and the German morale, and he took his daughter, Elsie, with him. That made her sweetheart, Teddy Swift, so sore that he welcomed our entrance into the war and beat the rest of the American Army to Berlin by several weeks. There he found Elsie in prison for having smashed the whisker-fixing machinery, and in imminent danger of being married to a whisker-wearer, but they managed to stave off death until the rest of the American Army arrived, and they made Berlin a suburb of West Hoboken. N. J.

Feature Shirley Macon as Elsie Dresser and Ernest Truex as Teddy Swift.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Ernest Truax and Shirley Mason Have the Laugh on Bill Hunzollern, of Holland, Europe.

Love and Jollity Combine in Making Brilliant Photodrama.
An Original Idea in Photoplaying Expressed in Fascinating Picture.

Advertising Angles: This is a lively farce that will delight your patrons. Play it up as a farce, drawing upon the authors and stars for pull. If you can, get a picture of the Kaiser. Affix his moustache with cord and counterweights. Then put up a sign. Pull the Kaiser's whiskers off and see what a dub he looks. That's why it was Good-Bye, Bill, when—but come and see all about it (date)." Get the papers to give you a write-up on the idea, and it will be worth a lot more than the slight trouble and expense involved. Use the six-sheet in preference to the smaller sizes, and in your newspaper work hammer away on the whiskers idea.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

"THE GREATEST THING IN LIFE"

David W. Griffith Presents, Through Paramount, Lillian Gish and Robert Harron in the Story of a Man Made Human by an Inhuman War.

Jeanette Peret.....Lillian Gish
Leo Peret, her father.....Adolphe Lestina
Edward Livington.....Robert Harron
Mons. le Bebe.....David Butler
American Soldier.....Elmo Lincoln
German Officer.....Edward Piel

Directed by David W. Griffith.

The Story: Edward Livingston is one of those unfortunate men who think themselves so far above the common clay that they cannot find fit associates. And to crown this he falls in love with Jeanette Peret, who sells cigars. Seeking to make her realize the magnitude of his condescension, he so angers her that she will have nothing to do with him. Secretly he befriends her father and enables him to return to France to seek to regain his health. Jeanette knows nothing of his action. In France she falls in love with Le Bebe, a grocer, who is far from being her ideal of a romantic lover, but who has his good points. Livingston follows, but again his consciousness of superiority repels the girl and she becomes engaged to Le Bebe. Then comes the war. Livingston joins the American forces and finds that there are real men in all walks of life. Even Le Bebe proves himself a man and meets a glorious death defending Jeanette from a brutal Prussian as the American dash to the rescue, and in the end Livingston proves himself worthy of the girl he once thought unworthy of himself.

Feature Lillian Gish as Jeanette Peret and Robert Harron as Edward Livingston.

Program and Advertising Phrases: David Wark Griffith, Wizard of Screen, Presents His Latest Masterwork.

War Breaks Shell of Social Precedent and True Love Is Triumphant.
Lillian Gish and Robert Harron Featured Players in New Griffith Masterpiece.

Advertising Angles: Do not permit anyone to go uninformed that this is a Griffith play, but also capitalize the stars of "Hearts of the World." At the same time in all your work make it plain that it is the undoubted artistry of Griffith which gives this play real value. Hammer on that fact, starting early, and keeping at it until the film is shipped back.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

Wadsworth volunteers for dangerous scout duty, and, when wounded, is brought back by Palmer at the risk of his own life. During the night the Huns attack and Helene is captured by a Prussian captain, but holds him off with his own gun. She is rescued in the morning, just as her strength gives way and the German is about to overpower her. The event is the turning point in the lives of the three, for Wadsworth tells her that the great fire of patriotism has burned the dross from their lives, and she turns to her husband with a new and greater love. Use plenty of paper and go well outside your regular territory with the pictorial display. Without advertising it will not make more money than a cheaper release, but by using circus methods you will make a large profit. Begin early and keep at it until the last day of the run. You can work street parades, boy scouts, returning soldiers, street wagons and sandwich men to advantage. Use some, if not all of these aids.

Directed by James Cruze.

The Story: Walsingham Van Dorn, a book agent, falls heir to $40,000,000 by the death of two uncles, who ran a swindling stock concern. He is appalled by the responsibility and finds that so huge a sum is no joke. Desiree Lane, daughter of one of the men his uncle swindled, demands that he pay back her father's two millions. He is willing to do so, but Wilkins, his confidential manager, has decamped with the money. Desiree accompanies him on his escape from his infuriated creditors. The country hotel in which they put up is burned to the ground and they escape in their night clothes. A kindly minister supplies them with clothes and marries them, and Van Dorn gets a job in a garage. Two years later Wilkins returns to make restitution. The money is too much for him, and the audience is left to guess whether or not Van Dorn takes it back.

Feature Wallace Reid as Walsingham Van Dorn and Ora Carewe as Desiree Lane.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Wallace Reid Star of Charming Screen Story Filled with Sensations.
Delightful Screen Drama Starring Wallace Reid Filled with Excitement.
Delightful Humor and Dramatic Thrills in Interest-Winning Photoplay.
Love, Romance and Adventure in Exciting Photoplay Starring Wallace Reid.
Trials and Tribulations of a Man Who Tries to Spend His Millions.

Advertising Angles: Play up Wallace Reid and work on the title. Ask if forty million dollars would be too much for the reader. Fasten a dollar bill to a card and letter it, "Just imagine forty millions of these! Would it be too much for you? It was Too Many Millions for Walsingham Van Dorn, as you'll see at (house and date)." Use these for window cards, with stills. Offer ten dollars to any couple who will be married on the stage of your theatre in their night clothes, as were Van Dorn and Desiree. It's a safe offer, but it will make talk.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

Released December 8.

Richard Dunlap.....George Fisher

Directed by Bertram Bracken.

The Story: In a Southern town, Clay Randolph holds a responsible position in the bank. He is tempted to speculate by Richard Dunlap, and, when the gamble falls, he takes the blame to shield Mary Singleton, who both men love, and who has eloped with Dunlap. He is compelled by the disgrace to leave town, and goes to New York, where he turns gentleman crook. There he again meets Dunlap and Mary. The former has lost his money, and seeks to gain loans through the personality of his wife. Randolph saves her from disgrace, and through an odd combination of circumstances Dunlap is killed while about to commit the crime Randolph planned, and the latter enlists to find regeneration in the great war.

Feature Henry B. Walthall as Clay Randolph and Fritzi Brunette as Mary Singleton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Henry Walthall Star of Sensational Drama of Modern Social Life.
Gentlemanly Raffles Steals Hearts and Treasures.
Man's Weakness and Its Sinful Consequences Set Forth in Photoplay.
Sensational Photoplay Fills with Thrills and Excitement.
Gambling in Hearts and Happiness Leads to Moral Bankruptcy.

Advertising Angles: There is only one angle to this—Walthall. Tell them enough of the story to let it be seen that he has a congenial role, and for the rest just keep hammering on his name. That should be all you need to do.

Advertising Aids: One each one, three and six sheets. Banner unmounted. One, two and three column cuts and mats. Lobby displays, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Press sheet.

"THE CHALLENGE ACCEPTED"

Pathe Presents the Arden Production of the Story of the Making of a Patriot with Zena Keefe and a Capital Cast.

Cast.

Sally Haston.....Zena Keefe
John Haston.....Charles Eldridge
Uncle Zeke Sawyer.....Russell Simpson
Steve Carey.....Chester Barnett
Tom Carey.....Joel Day
Billy Murphy.....Sidney D'Albrook
James Grogan.....John Hopkins
Capt. Roderick Brooke.....Warren Cook

Directed by Edwin L. Hollywood.

The Story: Steve Carey comes from Sparhook, N. C., to the training camp, not knowing what the war is about and caring less. He is resentful of discipline, and takes a particular dislike for Bill Murphy, who makes him the butt of his jokes. He gets tired of camp monotony, and makes his way back to Sparhook, where Sally Haston makes him go back and take his medicine, and a sympathetic commandant makes Steve see the war in a new light. He goes to Sparhook once more on leave, a hundred per cent. American and a better man.

Feature Zena Keefe as Sally Haston and Chester Barnett as Steve Carey.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Dainty Zena Keefe Star of Sensational Photodrama of Patriotism and Pluck.
What Happened When the Blue Ridge Mountaineers Went to War.
The Soul of a Patriot Revealed in Defiance of His Country's Laws.
Gripping Story of Strife and Adventures in Tennessee Mountains.
Dramatic Story of Great Appeal Told in Thrilling Episodes.

Advertising Angles: Miss Keefe has not been to the front much of late, and may require some reintroduction, but she can easily be identified to your patrons, and her name will pull. For newspaper work use the remaking of Carey for your talking point, but switch it to Miss Keefe, who held him to his duty. Offer it as a sidelight from the training camps rather than as a war story.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color; also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

"A LADY'S NAME"

Lewis J. Selznick Presents Constance Talmadge in Another Story by Cyril Harcourt, Author of "A Pair of Silk Stockings."

Cast.

Mabel Vere.....Constance Talmadge
Noel Corcoran.....Harrison Ford
Gerald Wantage.....Emory Johnson
Maud Bray.....Vera Doria
Flood.....James Farley
Adams.....Fred Huntley
Bird.....John Steppling

Directed by Walter Edwards.

The Story: A succession of amusing and exciting events showing the adventures of an enterprising and whimsical young woman who advertises for a husband is the theme of the story. She is Mabel Vere, a writer, whose reason for the advertisement is to secure material for a new novel. She is engaged to a somewhat priggish young man who naturally objects to her methods. After breaking her engagement with her fiance, being blackmailed by a butler, and changing her role from writer to cook, she becomes engaged to Noel Corcoran, the third and last applicant to her ad.

Feature Constance Talmadge as Mabel Vere and Harrison Ford as Noel Corcoran.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Constance Talmadge, Star of Vital Drama, Screened in Brilliant Photography.
See Constance Talmadge as a Cook, a Butler's Sweetheart and as a Reigning Society Belle.
What Happened When Girl Novelist Advertised for a Husband.
Another Light and Lilting Comedy-Drama Featuring Beautiful Star.
She Advertised for a Husband in the "Want" Columns—and Got One.

Advertising Angles: If you had "A Pair of Silk Stockings," play up the fact that this story is by the same author, and gives the same delightful glimpses into English high society. You might insert an advertisement for a husband in your local paper, using your street number instead of the name of your house, and signing the name of Mabel Vere. Get the editor to write it up. Then have a special lobby card ready on which the advertisement and its explanation is offered. Work this for the opening day. Give a hint of the story in your advertisements, but do not tell too much.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Cuts, two one-column, two two-column, one three-column, one one-half-column cut of star and one one-column and one two-column cuts of star.

Released in December by Select.

"THE KEY TO POWER"

The Educational Films Corporation Presents a Thrilling Story of a Coal Profiteer and the Fate Which Overtook Him.

Cast.

Ann Blair.....Claire Adams
Captain Bruce Wendell...Hugh Thompson
General Blair.....J. H. Gilmour
Bobby Blair.....Frazier Nounnan
President Parris, of the B. & W. Railroad Company.....Tom Burrough
Lieutenant Parris, U. S. A., his son, Fred Radcliffe

James Wendell, father of Bruce Wendell.....J. J. Dunn

The Story: Meyer, an agent of Prussia, conspired with Parrish, the president of a railroad company to first cripple the coal mines in his district and then buy the mines cheaply. Parrish has in mind merely a profiteering scheme, but Meyer plans to keep the coal from the Allies. The determined stand of James Wendell, the head of the mining company, results in his "removal" by an automobile accident, but his son, at his urging, carries on his dead father's work. His refusal to enlist loses him the love of Ann Blair, who promises herself to Parrish's son, but Ann is largely responsible for the unmasking of the gigantic plot, and learns that they also serve who fight in the army of commerce, and turns again from Parrish to Wendell.

Feature Claire Adams as Ann Blair and Hugh Thompson as Captain Bruce Wendell.

Dramatic Photoplay Based on Socialistic Labor Problems.
How a Beautiful Girl Saved America from the Threat of the Hun.
Love and Patriotism Mingled in Gripping Photoplay Revelations.
Great Drama of Modern Social Problems Filled with Thrills.

Advertising Angles: Work this for a timely profiteering story, dwelling upon the fact that it shows vivid scenes in Washington and in the coal mining district of West Virginia, from which much of the coal used by steamers is obtained. For a secondary angle work on the lines of see how coal helped win the war. Work these two angles rather than the spy feature.

Advertising Aids: One, three, six and twenty-four sheets. Seven 11x14 scene cuts. Two 22x28 scene cuts. Heralds. Squeegees. One, two and three column cuts. Two scene mats. Page and one-half page mats for newspapers. Plan book.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a hill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as ohnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhihitor. And public opinion aroused in hehalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

SILVERTIP

DIRECT CURRENT MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

The Silvertip is the standard negative carbon for direct current projection. It is of small diameter and is heavily plated with metal to give it a high current carrying capacity. When used with the Columbia upper it gives a pure white light of high intensity.

The illustration below shows clearly the difference in size of the Silvertip negative and the old negative carbon. The great improvement in positive crater is also shown.

The blunt point of the negative carbon in the old system permits the negative spot to wander since the spot covers but a small portion of the point. The negative spot on the Silvertip covers the entire point with the result that the arc cannot wander and cause a flicker on the lens and screen.

Index to Reviews, Comments, and Advertising Aids on the Films

Appended is a list of subjects released during the three months ending December 31, 1918, and upon the majority of which have been published reviews, comments, or advertising aids. This list is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors, we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or advertising aids can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; and "A" for advertising aids. Where reference letter is omitted it signifies that none was published. Of the later releases where any or all reference letters are omitted the missing information will probable be published in the next volume.

N. B.—Comments or reviews of episodes of serials or series are indexed in connection with general title of such serial or series and not under title o feach episode. Date shown for Pathe subjects indicates the week during which they were released.

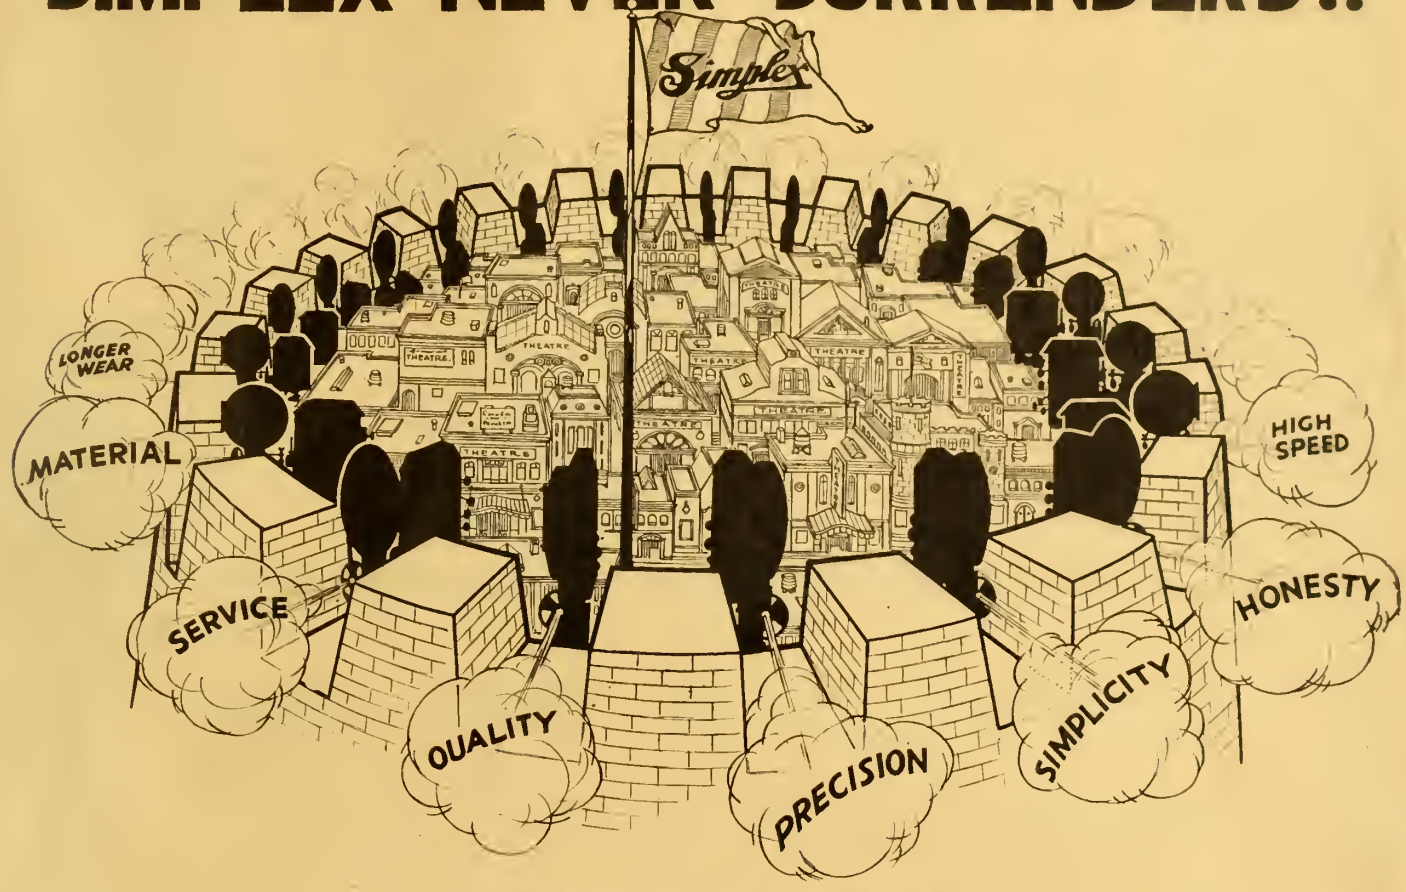
SIMPLEX NEVER SURRENDERS!!



—NOTE—

In the city of Chicago, the business and theatre district is centered in what is called "The Loop." This section is entirely encircled by the Elevated, which forms a structure of steel all around it, thereby giving it its name. There are nineteen Theatres within the Loop running pictures, and each one uses the Simplex, making it 100% strong; some of them run twenty-four hours a day.

FOUR years ago, in the city of Chicago, Generals "Mediocre Material" and "Questionable Quality" had possession of the "Loop." The Managers demanded day and night protection, but they weren't getting it. . . .

Up came the relief army of Simplex. They unlimbered their heaviest guns—trained their batteries upon the screens, and took the "loop" by storm!! . . . An unbroken line of supreme service has entrenched them in the "Loop" as solidly as Gibraltar itself. . . .

But now a battle was on in earnest. . . . The ousted Generals flung their forces against the "Iron-Ring" of Simplex. . . . "Get back into the Loop at any cost," were the orders of the day.

They made offers to the Loop Managers: They begged, pleaded and promised, but they were met by a barrage of disinterest. . . .

And now the Simplex forces have extended their lines outside the Loop, capturing the second and third line of trenches so that 85% of the entire city of Chicago is protected by Simplex security.

The four years' service flag of Simplex still waves with Simplex guarding the screens of the city. . . .

The qualities that have made our army the big factor in the war, are the same qualities that enabled Simplex to "hold the fort": Masterful Material—Peerless Precision—Splendid Service.
